WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—The total population of the United States is 93,402,151, according to figures given out at noon to-day by the Census Bureau for the 1910 enumeration.

This does not include the population of the Philippine Islands. The last census taken in the Philippines in 1903 showed a population of 7,635,426.

TOTAL HOUSE MEMBERSHIP MAY BE 450.

The census shows that if the present apportionment is held to there will be fifty-nine additional Representatives, making a total membership in the House of 450. The present membership is 391. The total estimated population of the United States, including the Philippines, is 101,100,000.

The additional representation in Congress will be distributed as follows: Alabama, 1; California, 4; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 1; Florida, 1; Georgia, 1; Illinois, 4; Kansas, 1; Louisiana, 1; Massachusetts, 2; Michigan, 1; Minnesota, 1; Mississippi, 1. New Jersey, 3; New York, 6; North Carolina, 1; North Dakota, 1; Ohio, 3; Oklahoma, 4; Oregon, 1; Pensylvania, 6; Texas, 4; Virginia, 4; West Virginia, 1; Wisconsin, 1; Washington, 3; total, 59.

The population of Georgia is 2,609,121, a gain of 17.7 per cent, or an increase of 92,700.

The population of Wisconsin is 2,833,840, a gain of 12.7 per cent, an increase of 264,818.

The population of Washington is 1,141,990, a gain of 120 per cent, increase 623,887.

The population of Montana is 376,053, a gain of 54.5 per cent over the population of 1900; increase, 132,724.

The Census Bureau to-day dropped 120 employes from the rolls, and a further reduction in the force probably will be made next week. Director Durand to-day sent his report to the House of Representatives. It was referred to the Census Committee. The committee of which Representative Crumpacker of Indiana is chairman held a meeting and began preliminary work on the bill for reapportionment.

Weatherman Smith says the merry jingle of sleigh bells may be heard to-morrow. He says also that the present cold snap will be broken by nightfall. Early Monday the mercury will take another tumble, he says, just how low he can't tell at this time.

With the thermometer down to the 9 above mark at 6 o'clock this morning, Boston suffered its coldest day of the year. But they have the satisfaction of knowing that it wasn't as cold as up in Northfield, Vt., where the mercury dropped to 14 below, making it the coldest place in the United States. In contrast to Northfield, Galveston, Tex., boasts of a record of 66 above zero early to-day.

The predictions say there will be light variable winds from the south to-night and they will bring along some snow, which will extend from northern New England to Pennsylvania west and as far south as Florida. Monday will be much colder, so that if enough snow falls there should be good sleighing the first of the week.

According to the official statistics, to-day was the coldest of this Winter and also the coldest December 10, with possibly one or two exceptions, since 1876. One of the exceptions was December 10, 1902, when the thermometer went down to one below zero in Boston. The warmest December 10 in this city within the remembrance of weather men was in 1907, when the mercury was flirting with the 64 mark.

ANOTHER MUTINY IN BRAZIL'S NAVY

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—It was stated on the New York Coffee Exchange to-day that a new mutiny has broken out in the Brazilian Navy at Rio Janeiro, and that political disturbance of a serious nature had also occurred in the capital.

10 KILLED; 50 CAGED IN MINE

CALGARY, Alberta, Dec. 10.—Ten men are known to be dead, six dying and nearly fifty others believed to have been burned to death in the Bellevue mine of the Western Canada Collieries, which is a raging furnace to-day as the result of an explosion that occurred early to-day.

Scores of weeping mothers, wives and children are crowded about the mouth of the pit hoping against hope that the flames have not destroyed their loved ones. Rescuers made desperate attempts to force a way through the burning shaft, but in vain. The smoke and fire drove them to the surface almost as fast as they descended, and it is believed now that all the men in the mine will have perished before the fires are quenched.

Seventy men were at work in the mine when the terrific explosion occurred. Seventeen of these rushed for the exits, but only seven succeeded in getting to the surface alive. The other ten, overcome by the smoke and heat, collapsed and died. Their bodies were taken out by rescuers who went down into the pit immediately after the exlosion. Of the seven who got to the surface six were fatally burned and will die.

GIRL SOUGHT FOR AS A SLAYER

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 10.—The police of Rochester to-day started a search for a nineteen-year-old girl, who says she is Gertrude Enright of Kingston, Ont., accused by the police of having dismembered the body of a baby, stuffing some of the parts into a drain pipe and burning others. The crime was discovered in the rooming house conducted by Mrs. Van Dusen at No. 99 Broadway. An investigation to find what was clogging the bathroom drain pipe disclosed the arms, legs and trunk of an infant.

The Enright girl broke down and confessed as soon as the discovery was made, the police say, although she disappeared before she could be taken into custody.

LABOR LEADER IS VINDICATED

The Suffolk County Grand Jury reported to-day. There were forty-seven "true bills."

Among the "no bills" was the case of George Crassey, a contracting lather and member of the Lathers' Union. He and Albert Rone, president of the union, had a dispute and a struggle in Wells Memorial Building on November 6, after a meeting of the organization. Rone fell to the floor and later died in the City Hospital. In a lower court Crassey was held on a manslaughter charge, but the Grand Jury has freed him from it.

Another "no bill" vindicates Patrick McLaughlin, also held in a lower court on a manslaughter charge. He and Jeremiah Buckley had a dispute in a Charlestown saloon, and it is alleged that after the men went outside blows were struck. Buckley was later found unconscious in a doorway and died in the Relief Hospital.

An indictment was returned against Dr. William W. Nutting of Shawmut avenue. He is charged with illegally treating Carrie A. Weller. She died in the City Hospital on October 20. Dr. Nutting is about seventy years old.

WANT TO GO TO THE THEATRE?

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Ever since the AMERICAN began publication in Boston I have received from women, young and old, letters of the utmost personal confidence, propounding problems that I have tried to answer in a way that would be helpful to my readers.

This letter writing has established an intimate friendship between my girl and women readers and myself. I feel that I would like to show my appreciation of their confidence in me in some practical way.

So I am going to give a theatre party to several hundred girls and women who live in Metropolitan Boston. And I shall make in the SUNDAY AMERICAN to-morrow a definite announcement that will interest all the girl and women readers of this newspaper.

I shall not, of course, be able to take all of my readers to the theatre, because there are so many thousands of them, but I am going to do my best to give several hundred a pleasant evening without any expense to themselves.

And when I say girls and women, I mean young girls of sixteen and over and women as old as seventy or over. Young girls are beautiful in my sight, but women of old age are adorable, so there will be in my theatre party no discrimination against age.

And there will be no publicity, either, so my feminine friends need not fear to write to me.

But I cannot tell you more to-day. Read my article and invitation to you in the SUNDAY AMERICAN to-morrow.

STARTLING GLOVER STORY TOLD BY TWO WITNESSES

Just before the defence rested to-day in the trial of Hattie Le Blanc for the murder of Clarence F. Glover, in the East Cambridge court, two men were called to the witness stand who swore that on the night Glover was shot in his Waltham laundry they saw a woman hurrying from the laundry between 8:30 and 9 o'clock. Each of the witnesses declared positively that Hattie Le Blanc was not the woman.

ONE MAN FOLLOWED MYSTERIOUS WOMAN

One of the witnesses declared that he had followed the mysterious woman; that she met a man, and that the man finally disappeared in the yard of a house which he since learned was owned by Mrs. Glover. The two witnesses who gave this startling testimony had not previously testified at any of the proceedings that followed the murder. One was Isaac Walker, a car starter in Waltham, and the other Charles E. Benner, janitor of the First Baptist Church and other buildings in Waltham. This is the story that Walker told on the stand:

"I went down Crescent street to Moody street to get a car. I just missed the car and walked down Moody street toward the bridge. It was just thirteen minutes of nine. As I passed the driveway leading by the tea store to the laundry yard a man was standing at the corner smoking and a woman was coming out at a good gait. She went to the car and I got on just behind her.

"She was nervous and shifty. Her face was flushed and she appeared frightened. She got off near the Common and started through the Common toward Main street. She acted so strangely that I decided to follow her. She turned down a path toward the depot. She went down Elm into Central street. On Central street she met a man and hurried up to him. She said to the man, 'Why, Mr. Elm——'" (The witness was not allowed to tell anything more that he heard.

Woman Darts Behind Fence.

"The man and woman flew along Central street. They went to Newton street and crossed over into Barton street, where they separated, the woman taking the right sidewalk and the man the left. I followed the woman. When she got to the light at Barton and Townsend streets she started on a run through the open field and darted behind a fence.

"The last I saw of the man he was going up Townsend street to Main street. He turned to the right and then itno a yard and I lost sight of him behind the house. I learned since the house belongs to Mr. Glover."

When Hattie Le Blanc was taken forward to face the witness and he was asked if the were the woman he had followed he replied:

"No, sir; I followed a woman, not a child."

The defence rested at 11:29, after which District Attorney Higgins put on some witnesses in rebuttal.

Mrs. Glover's Denial.

Lillian M. Glover was called to the witness stand this afternoon in the trial of Hattie Le Blanc on the charge of killing Mrs. Glover's husband, and she denied that she told Mrs. Kate Sampson that she intended to buy a revolver and shoot her husband. She denied that she bought the revolver with which Glover was shot.

Hattie Le Blanc was taken from her seat to the witness stand, and as the girl stood facing Charles E. Benner when he was on the stand, he was asked:

"Is that the person you met in the alleyway that night?"

"That is not the person," replied Bennere.

"I had been at the First Baptist Church," testifiede Benner. "I went into the alleyway that leads to the laundry. I know it was after half past eight. I saw a woman coming from the direction of the laundry. She was just abreast of the electric pole when I first saw her and was going along at a quick jog.

"I met her half way down the alley, and she passed me quickly. I did not know her. She was about five feet, five inches in height, weighed 130 to 135 pounds and wore a three-quarter coat of dark material.

Remembered by Her Hurry.

Benner said that he did not get a view of the woman's face. He then declared that Hattie Le Blanc was not the woman at all. Under cross-examination Benner said that he recalled the woman because she was in such a hurry.

Michael P. Vahey, a laundry agent, testified that he went to the Glover home on the day of the funeral before the funeral took place, and before Hattie Le Blanc was found under a bed there. He started to go into the guest chamber, where the girl was later found, he said, and had almost reached the bed when Seymour Glover beckoned him to come out. When he walked out of the room he said that Samuel D. Elmore and Mrs Lillian M. Glover were staring at him.

Isaac Walker, a car starter, testified that he saw a woman come out of the driveway to the laundry yard shortly before 9 o'clock on the night of the murder. She was nervous and flushed and appeared frightened. She got on a car, rode to the Common and got off. Walker followed her, and finally on Central street, he testified, the woman met a man, and she said:

"Why, Mr. Elm——"

Walker was not allowed to tell anything more he heard her say.

Mrs. Glover a Marksman.

Mrs. Alma Roche, who was formerly employed in the Glover family, testified today that she had seen Mrs. Lillian M. Glover fire off a revolver several times, and that once Mrs. Glover shot a squirrel in a tree near the house with a revolver. The squirrel fell to the ground. This testimony contradicted testimony given on the witness stand by Mrs. Glover, who swore that she never shot anything in her life. Once, she said, she shot at a woodpecker and missed it.

Mrs. Ida C. Rice of Waltham, called to the stand, testified that Mrs. Glover said she married Glover because he had control of her property. She heard Mrs. Glover call her husband a "very bad man."

Lawyer Melvin M. Johnson of counsel for the defence told Judge Bond that he might be able to complete the evidence offered in behalf of the accused girl by the noon recess. This indicated that the defendant, herself, would not be called to the stand.

Counsel Reaches Agreement.

Court opened at eight minutes past 9 o'clock. Hattie was brought in to the court room shortly before that time. After she had taken her seat Sheriff Fairbairn had a short talk with her. After the talk he spoke to the two attorneys, after which Mr. Johnson announced that counsel had agreed on three matters as follows:

"First, that the key taken from an envelope marked 'W' for identification, which Mrs. Glover when she was on the stand identified as the key to the front door of the house, had been taken from Hattie when she was arrested.

"Second, that when Hattie was arrested and taken to the jail she weighed 100 pounds and that two weeks ago, when she was weighed, just before the trial started, she weighed 123 pounds.

"Third, that Hattie never wore eyeglasses until shortly before this trial, when she was examined by an oculist."

Attorney Nathan Tufts was in court when it opened this morning. It was announced to the reporters that he was in town looking up two witnesses from whom important developments are expected.

Mrs. Alma Roche, a former domestic in the Glover home, took the witness stand and resumed her testimony at the point

4 TEAMS TIED IN 6-DAY RACE

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—The Kangaroo team, composed of Hehir and Goullet, took the lead on the final day in the six-day bicycle race at 8:40 a. m. by gaining a lap on the other six teams left in the contest. The score at 9 a. m., the hundred and twenty-ninth hour, was:

Hehir and Goullet, 2,336 miles 7 laps; Fogler and Hill, 2,336 miles 6 laps; Root and Moran, 2,336 miles 6 laps; Mitten and Thomas, 2,336 miles 5 laps; Cameron and Halstead, 2,336 miles 3 laps; Rutt and Clarke, 2,336 miles 6 laps; West and Demara, 2,336 miles 4 laps.

Former record, 2,480 miles and 6 laps, made by Hill and Demara in 1908.

Kangaroos Lose Lead.

Hehir and Goullet were unable to stand the pace set by their opponents after they had jumped into the lead and at 10 a. m had fallen behind leaving three other teams tied for the lead. The score at 10 o'clock was:

Hehir and Goullet, 2,351 miles 2 laps; Fogler and Hill, 2,351 miles 6 laps; Root and Moran, 2,351 miles 6 laps; Mitten and Thomas, 2,351 miles 5 laps, Cameron and Halstead, 2,351 miles 3 laps; Rutt and Clarke, 2,351 miles 6 laps; West and Demara, 2,351 miles 4 laps. Record 2,508 miles, made by Moran and MacFarland in 1908.

The score at 11 a. m. showed Hehir and Goullet recovering lost ground; Hehir and Goullet, 2366 miles, 4 laps; Fogler and Hill, 2366 miles, 4 laps; Mitten and Thomas, 2366 miles, 3 laps; Cameron and Halstead, 2366 miles, 1 lap; Rutt and Clarke, 2366 miles, 4 laps; Root and Moran, 2366 miles, 4 laps; West and Demara, 2366 miles, 2 laps. Record, 2528 miles and 8 laps, Moran and MacFarland, 1908.

The 12 o'clock score: Hehir and Goullet, 2,382 miles 3 laps; Fogler and Hill, 2,382 miles 3 laps; Root and Moran, 2,382 miles 3 laps; Mitten and Thomas, 2,382 miles 2 laps; Cameron and Halstead, 2,382 miles; Rutt and Clark, 2,382 miles 3 laps; West and Demara, 2,382 miles 1 lap. Record, 2,548 miles 4 laps, by McFarland and Moran, in 1908.

One o'clock score: Hehir and Goullet, 2,399 miles 8 laps; Folger and Hill, 2,399 miles, 8 laps; Root and Moran, 2,399 miles, 8 laps; Mitten and Thomas, 2,399 miles, 7 laps; Cameron and Halsteed, 2,399 miles, 5 laps; Rutt and Clarke, 2,399 miles, 8 laps; West and Demara, 2,399 miles, 6 laps. Record, 2,556 miles and 2 laps, made by McFarland and Moran in 1908.

When the early morning dashes were over, Rutt and Clarke had regained two laps and brought about a quadruple tie for first place at 8 o'clock. The score at that hour was:

Hehir and Goullet, 2,321 miles 7 laps; Fogler and Hill, 2,321 miles 7 laps; Root and Moran, 2,321 miles 7 laps; Mitten and Thomas, 2,321 miles 6 laps; Cameron and Halstead, 2,321 miles 4 laps, Rutt and Clarke, 2,321 miles 7 laps; West and Demara, 2,321 miles 3 laps. Former record 2,469 miles and 9 laps, made by Hill and Demara, 1908.

The most daring riding that the spectators have seen since the contest began started at 5:55 a. m., and Walter Rutt was the star of the whole sprint, it being by his work, practically alone, that the two laps were gained in fifteen minutes of riding.

Rutt Steals Ahead.

He got away from the bunch suddenly and was nearly half way around the track before his sleepy competitors realized his purpose. They had expected an easy jog during this, the early part of the day, this being the final session. But Rutt outgeneralled them, and despite their utmost efforts he picked up a lap. He was then relieved by his teammate, Jack Clarke. For a few minutes all jogged along slowly, and then Clarke shot out to the lead. He got a lead of fifty yards before the others again woke up and was then immediately relieved by Rutt. Dashing around the track at neck-breaking speed, with the others in pursuit, Rutt managed to pick up the second lap after making six circles of the track.

COALITION GAINS NOW 37 SEATS

LONDON, Dec. 10.—At noon to-day the government coalition forces had a lead of thirty-seven over the Unionists. Polling went forward in thirteen constituencies. The totals at noon were:

Liberals	166
Nationalists	54
Laborites	28
Independent Nationalists	6
Total coalition	254
Unionists	217

The seat of David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, was at issue to-day in the Welsh County of Carnarvon. Mr. Lloyd-George was a candidate for re-election against Austin Jones, the Unionist candidate. It was a foregone conclusion that the Chancellor would be victorious, although Unionist leaders predicted that the Liberal majority of last January's election would be cut down.

The weather today continued mild, but was disagreeably wet with brisk and sudden squalls of rain.

Premier Asquith Returned.

Unionists elected their candidates in the Wirral electorate of Cheshire, in East Somerset, and at London University. At the last named place Sir P. Magnus was returned to his seat. The Unionists' candidates were also successful in Newark, Nottinghamshire; St Albans, Hertfordshire; Chichester, in Sussex County, and Appleby in North Westmoreland County.

Sir John Randles was the Unionist to lose his seat at Cockersmouth, Cumberlandshire. He was elected in January last with 941 votes to spare. The Hon. G. Howard is the Liberal candidate who will represent Cockermouth in the next Parliament.

The Socialists, who had held Ince, Lancashire, since last January, were deposed, S. Walsh, the Socialist candidate for re-election, being defeated by a Laborite. The Socialist majority in January was 2,004.

The Liberals were successful in Cleveland, Yorkshire, returning a candidate. The Cleveland electorate sent the Hon. Herbert T. Samuel to Parliament in January, giving the Radicals a majority of 1,893.

Premier Asquith was returned to Parliament from East Fifeshire, Scotland. The election was held yesterday, but the result was not announced until noon to-day.

The Liberals made another gain in the town of Saffron Walden in Essex County. Their candidate was also elected in Spalding, Lincolnshire. The Liberals were successful in West Linlithgow, Scotland. Unionist victories included the town of Uxbridge, Howden, and the electorate of North Hants. At Cambridge the Liberal candidate was elected. The Unionists elected at Newbury in Berkshire and Woodbridge in Suffolk.

RESCUES 4 MEN FROM WILD SEA

GLOUCESTER, Dec. 10.—Four men in an open boat in a wild sea early to-day narrowly escaped death off Thatcher's Island, near Cape Ann. Fear is expressed for the life of Edward Kelly of Calais, Me., sixty-five years old, one of the men, who was nearly frozen when rescued.

Kelly, with his three companions, Captain [illegible] Kelly, Sullivan Frothingham and Harry [illegible], all of Calais, Me., abandoned the schooner Hazel Dell, bound from Calais, Me., to Boston with a load of planks, about 11 o'clock Friday night, and for three hours they drifted about in a gale before Life Saver A. W. Chase of the Gap Head life saving station at Rockport heard their cries for help.

The Hazel Dell started out from Calais Wednesday. Owing to the furious storm Captain Kelly put in at Portland the next day, but at night he thought the sea had subsided enough to permit his making his objective point, Boston. He miscalculated, and five miles off Thatcher's Island the craft sprung aleak, and the hold and cabins were flooded, thus forcing the crew of four to the decks. They stayed as long as they dared and then transferred out in an open dory. The boat was not a seaworthy one and she filled frequently. The men were forced to bail continuously. After rowing for two hours they found themselves a mile off the Gap Head Life-Saving Station. Not daring to go nearer to shore for fear of striking rocks, they yelled and finally attracted the attention of Life-Saver Chase, who was patrolling the beach. He had to run a half mile to get a lifeboat, but finally the men were rescued. It was some time before they were able to tell their story, for all were nearly frozen. Mate Kelly is said to be in a dangerous condition.

The revenue cutter Gresham and the tug U. S. Nichols of Boston put out to locate the abandoned vessel this morning.

EVEN BATHTUBS DRY IN SALEM

In the interest of Salem's drinking population, everybody in Salem is requested not to take a bath until further orders. If the folks in Salem take a bath they won't have anything to drink. Salem is a dry city. The water is very, very short.

The water in Wenham Lake, the city's water supply, is falling at the rate of half an inch a day, meaning a loss of millions of cubic feet within a few days. Just what causes the leak is unknown. The foes of temperance have not been blamed as yet. If you want to keep clean, or if you are an everyday bather, don't move to Salem for some time to come.

"Don't take a bath," says the city's water board, which won't be a water board if the supply continues to vanish—"use a sponge." And to add insult to injury, or to square things all round, the board adds: "If you are not a bather, and simply use a washbowl, fill the bowl half full instead of to the brim."

Wherefore Salem prays for rain.

WHITINSVILLE HAS A WATER FAMINE

WHITINSVILLE, Dec. 10.—As a result of long continued drouth the town water supply has given out and the reservoir is practically empty. Water is being pumped into the mains from the Meadow Pond, which was formerly the town supply, but its condition is such that the Board of Health has notified householders to boil it before using for drinking and cooking purposes.

FOSS MESSAGE TO BE RECORD IN BREVITY

The inaugural message of Governor-elect Foss will probably not exceed two newspaper columns in length. It will be, in that case, one of the briefest submitted by a Massachusetts Governor for years. Its brevity will allow it being read from end to end by the public, which usually shies at page-long documents. Mr. Foss believes that development of our manufacturing and harbor interests and the position of New England in respect to reciprocity [illegible] loom larger than ordinary State issues. So these may be looked to form the burden of the message.

LOW WATER CHECKS WORK IN WATERVILLE

WATERVILLE, Me., Dec. 10.—Low water in the Kennebec River has caused temporary suspension of work in several mills dependent on water power and 2,000 employes are idle in this city. The Lockwood cotton mill, which has been running on half time, has been forced to shut down completely. The Hollingsworth & Whitney paper mill is running on part time and the electric power companies are seriously handicapped in delivering power to customers. The river is lower than in midsummer and the reserve reservoirs are almost exhausted. Only protracted rains can relieve the situation.

DAVIE'S WELLESLEY FIANCEE PROSTRATED

Heart-broken and almost prostrated over the deception practiced on her by Robert E. Davie, the young broker who has fled Boston, leaving behind many victims of his financial genius, Miss Esther M. Stewart, the Wellesley College senior, whom he wooed and won as his prospective bride, has left college and returned to her home in Aurora, Ill. She has, of course, broken the engagement she entered into with Davie, who represented himself to her as a single man, and has returned the engagement ring and other presents she received from Davie.

Miss Stewart left Wellesley early this week, and is now at the home of her father, Thomas B. Stewart, in that city.

Miss Stewart is a handsome girl, prominent in college athletics and a member of this year's hockey team.

At Wellesley College Miss Stewart reported the sudden illness of her father and hurried home.

Met Other Wellesley Girls.

To a newspaper man in Aurora, Miss Stewart admitted receiving "some" flowers from Davie, but declared he had never spent such a sum for them as has been stated. She also admitted she had written him several letters, but said she had broken off correspondence, as well as her engagement, some time ago.

Miss Stewart denied ever visiting at the Davie apartment. "I met him through the minister of the Old South Church," she said. "Mr. Davie and the pastor appeared to be great friends. I know other girls from Wellesley who met him in the same way. None of us had the slightest idea he was married. He seemed to be such a perfect gentleman.

"Our first meeting occurred about two years ago. After a time we became formally engaged. We went to some social affairs, but there never was the slightest breath of suspicion against him—I cannot understand this thing at all. Why, the minister that I refer to used to give little parties to which he would invite girls from the college and the best young men of the town."

Girl's Father Talks.

"Why, I was not even at home when he called here. Papa chatted with him for a half-hour or so and then Mr. Davie departed for Chicago. I broke our engagement just because we had a little quarrel, but I assure you that I had no suspicions of anything like this. Yes, the engagement was broken several months ago."

Senator Stewart admitted that his daughter knew Davie to be married and also admitted that the engagement was broken when Boston bankers began suspecting that Davie was off in his business transactions.

"Of course, Esther must have known he was married when other people in Boston knew it," said Mr. Stewart. "But it was just a case of ordinary friendship on her part. He sent her some flowers and she wrote him some letters, and I guess some of them were silly, just like other girls write.

"Yes, I learned from her that she knew he was married to the daughter of a lawyer. The impression was that it was a case of incompatibility between Davie and his bride. Oh, it broke my laughter up when she recently learned that Davie was not right. She is now home for the Christmas holidays. The failure of Davie did not hasten her trip here."

Thinks Davie Near.

Among Davie's effects at the warehouse, which are to be sold at auction on next Monday, is a small but valuable oil painting, given to Davie by Miss Stewart, while in the possession of the authorities there is said to be a number of letters from her to Davie.

Miss Stewart's father is wealthy and the First National Bank of Aurora, of which he is president, has assets of more than $1,250,000. It was rumored in Aurora when the engagement of Miss Stewart to Davie became known that the young broker had interested some of the rich men of that locality in his ventures.

Chief Watts believes Davie is not more than a day's journey from Boston, despite the letter received from Hotel Lara, Mexico, which Davie wrote. The letter is dated November 19, while the postmark shows it was not mailed until November 29. Watts believes Davie gave the letter to a relative who is in Mexico and had him mail it as a blind. He has telegraphed the police in Mexico City asking them to find out when Davie was at the Lara.

Davie is believed to be almost penniless, wherever he is, as he had to give up his watch, jewelry and most of his clothing, to make good his bill at the Astor House, during his stay in New York. This was just before he had disappeared.

HARVARD MAN SAYS WIFE IS PRISONER

On the charge that his wife was being held against her will, Prescott H. Weber, a former Harvard man, who says he is the stepson of A. Hollis White of Boston, and son of a member of the piano manufacturing family of Webers, has caused the arrest in New York of Joseph Lawrence, twenty-seven years old, who lives at No. 349 West Forty-eighth street, New York. The New York police are now searching for Weber's wife, Mrs. Martha A. Weber.

Weber, according to the description given by himself and his friend, was a very wealthy young man up to last May. His stepfather, he says, is owner of a big tract of land in Costa Rica and is Costa Rican Consul in Boston. Last May young Weber went to New York from Boston and met a young woman who became Mrs. Weber. His family were much displeased and cast him off, the friend says.

LODGE BEATEN, SAYS MAYOR

Mayor Fitzgerald says "Lodge is licked. He cannot come back."

He said this in Washington, where he has been speaking before the waterways congress, talking with President Taft and renewing his Congressional acquaintance generally. Dispatches from Washington quote interviews with him.

The Mayor heartily approves the anti-Lodge tour of Governor-elect Foss. "The proper thing," says the Mayor.

So far as Mr. Lodge's "statesmanship" goes, Mr. Fitzgerald thinks Mr. Lodge has not a fractional part of what has been credited to him.

Replied With Emphasis.

The Mayor met many members of Congress from the islands at Washington. Most of them asked him, of course, how the Senatorial fight in Massachusetts would end. Mr. Fitzgerald's reply, given with much emphasis, was this:

"Mr. Lodge is licked," the Mayor told his inquirers with great positiveness. "A great many people have criticised the Governor-elect for his tour of the State, but he is doing the proper thing, and he has my hearty approval. Mr. Foss's tour is keeping the Democrats in line.

"There is no question but that the popular vote at the last election showed an overwhelming sentiment against Mr. Lodge, and Mr. Foss is keeping the question before the public. Republicans elected to the Legislature by small majorities will not dare to vote for Mr. Lodge in view of the sentiment existing against his return, for their constituents will not tolerate it.

May Be a Deadlock.

"Either a progressive Republican will be elected or there will be a deadlock. Mr. Lodge cannot come back, the Republican leaders will see that, and Mr. Lodge will be forced to retire.

"The relations, commercial and social, between the United States and Canada ought to be of the most intimate character. That they are not, Mr. Lodge is largely to blame. Mr. Lodge has for years thrown obstacles in the way of the two countries coming together. Had he had a fraction of the statesmanship with which he is credited he would long ago have seen how important it is that there should be a good understanding and the great benefit it would be for Massachusetts and New England.

"While other men have worked hard to that end and cultivated friendship, Mr. Lodge has promoted friction. The people of New England are tired of that sort of thing and want a change. That is one reason why they will not send Mr. Lodge to Washington to continue to misrepresent them for the next six years."

MURRAY AS "BABY" OF 62D CONGRESS

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—Representative-elect William F. Murray of Boston spent a few hours in Washington looking about the Capitol with Representative O'Connell. He came with Mayor Fitzgerald. Mr. Murray made a decidedly favorable impression upon his future colleagues. Everybody commented upon his youth—he is twenty-nine years old—and predicted he would become known as "the baby of the sixty-second Congress."

GRAND LODGE IN FIRST SESSION

The first meeting of the official board of the Grand Lodge of the United States, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Manchester Unity, opened in this city to-day and as principal business the members wrestled with the problem of whether or not they will unite the Canadian Odd Fellow districts with those in this country and thus eventually get control of all the Manchester Unity Lodges in North America.

The grand lodge was organized in Boston last July, with James W. Gregg of Everett as grand master. This lodge had its inception in the Manchester Unity lodges, which was the first jurisdiction of the Odd Fellows in this country, the so-called American order being formed by Manchester Unity men from England. The Massachusetts district was formed about a quarter century ago and since then the lodge has spread throughout the country, resulting in the birth of the grand lodge in this city five months ago.

Should the plan for a union of the Canadian districts with those of this country go through at to-day's meeting, it will mean the extending of the general charge of the grand lodge to all corners of North America.

Among other matters considered by the official board were the question of rules and regulations for the lodges in this country. The grand committee on rules took up this problem previous to the meeting of the official board. The matter of acquisition of lodges in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and New Jersey was also arranged for.

Beside Grand Master Gregg, the grand officers include: John G. Ritter of Philadelphia, deputy grand master; Joseph H. Handford of New Bedford, grand secretary; Robert McNeeley of Norwich, Ct., grand treasurer; directors, George K. Keetwell of Middleboro, James W. Riley of Lawrence, Joseph Armstrong and John E. Aron of Philadelphia and Joseph C. Wooley of Norwich.

SAVES OWN LIFE BY KNOWING SCIENCE

FORT PLAIN, N. Y., Dec. 10.—John F. Gleason saved his life by his knowledge of the law of gravitation. Gleason, holding a keg of rivets, was on a bridge across the Mohawk river, thirty-five feet from the ice of the river below, which was frozen strongly enough to support skaters. Gleason lost his balance and fell headforemost, tightly clasping the keg. In the fall it occurred to Gleason that it might be well to let go. He did. The keg, falling faster, broke the ice just ahead of his nose. He landed squarely in the hole made by the keg, and got not so much as a scratch.

WIRES 'ROBBED' DURING HOLDUP

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—While a highwayman was holding him up to-day Thomas Nolan, station agent and telegrapher for the West Shore railroad at Highlands, N. Y., wired an account of the robbery to Weehawken.

"The robber has told me to keep on at work," his message stated. "I am pretending that I am sending regular messages. He does not know what I am doing. Please send help."

During the entire time that the highwayman was in the station Nolan was describing his movements. Operator Gleisner who received the message at Weehawken sent word to Cornwall, and a posse was hurried over to Highlands.

When the posse arrived there Nolan informed the leader that the robber had taken $170 in cash and some railroad tickets from the safe and had then gone down the tracks.

Nolan's description by wire of the hold-up is one of the most dramatic incidents in the annals of railroad telegraphy. Gleisner, at Weehawken, was receiving messages shortly before 5 o'clock this morning when a call from Highlands broke in on him.

"This is Nolan," the message stated, "I am being held up. I was sitting at my desk when a young man with a light top overcoat came in, pointed revolver. Said he wanted money, would kill me if I resisted.

"Told me to work at an instrument. I went to key, called you up."

"Will send help at once," Gleisner replied. "Keep right on at work."

SCOUTS' LEGAL INQUIRY BEGINS

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—It was learned to-day that the District Attorney's office is making an investigation into the methods of the clique of directors of the American Boy Scout movement in wringing many contributions from the unwilling pockets of persons prominent in public life.

The facts presented to the District Attorney disclose that $1,000 was secured from Supreme Court Justice James W. Gerard on false representation. Justice Gerard was called upon at his chambers by a man named Nowak, who stated, it is said, that he was Mr. MacGrath, who he also said was Mr. Hearst's personal secretary. Mr. Nowak told Justice Gerard that he came directly from Mr. Hearst and that Mr. Hearst had directed him to request from Justice Gerard a contribution of $1,000 for the American Boy Scout.

To the inquiries of Justice Gerard, Mr. Nowak replied that Mr. Hearst was personally collecting funds for the movement and directing the disbursement of the funds for the benefit of the national movement of the American Boy Scout. At this interview it is said that Justice Gerard promised to make a contribution of $1,000 on the strength of his acquaintance with Mr. Hearst, and the assurance that Mr. Hearst had sent to him for the contribution, and was not only collecting, but disbursing the funds.

Called Again for Check.

Several days later, Justice Gerard's secretary was called on the telephone, and it was stated to him that Mr. MacGrath "the personal secretary of Mr. Hearst," wanted to remind Justice Gerard that the American Boy Scout directors had not yet received his check for $1,000, and that as they were short of money they hoped the Justice would send along his check by messenger to the offices of the directors.

As Justice Gerard was not at his chambers at that time the person who stated he was Mr. MacGrath became more and more impatient, and called up the Justice's secretary several times, urging more and more the immediate requirement for the payment of the $1,000.

Under all this pressure, Justice Gerard, when he returned to his chambers, drew his check for $1,000 and sent it over to the offices of the directors of the American Boy Scout.

About this time James P. MacGrath who styles himself Managing Director of the American Boy Scout, was stating that the movement had in bank $15,000, although Justice Gerard was told that their need of his check was because they were very short of funds.

Gerard's Personal Inquiry.

On Thursday Justice Gerard learned of some of the transactions of the American Boy Scout movement and began a personal investigation. In the course of his investigation, Justice Gerard, after getting through his court work for the day sent for General James O'Beirne, who is known as the treasurer of the Board of Directors of the American Boy Scout movement.

General O'Beirne is employed in the county court house as a deputy clerk at $2,500 a year. Justice Gerard demanded that Treasurer O'Beirne bring before him the man who said he was Mr. MacGrath, representing himself to be the secretary of Mr. Hearst. Mr. MacGrath was waiting in the corridor outside, and Treasurer O'Beirne brought him quickly before the Justice.

On seeing MacGrath, Justice Gerard immediately realized that MacGrath was not the man who called upon him and gave MacGrath's name, and made the first demand for the contribution. MacGrath, being asked who was the man that he had sent to Justice Gerard, replied that it was Nowak, and as Nowak was also waiting outside in the hall, he was brought before the Justice and questioned by him.

Returned Check to Justice.

The result of Justice Gerard's interview with MacGrath, O'Beirne and Nowak was that his contribution was returned by drawing a check to his order for $1,000.

This is one, of the class of incidents that impelled William Randolph Hearst, Congressman Jefferson M. Levy and Admiral Dewey to announce their retirement from the Board of Directors of the American Boy Scouts and to warn the public against the peculiar methods of the clique of directors who are responsible for these methods in gathering contributions.

It is said that the clique of directors had succeeded in getting together over $40,000, but that Treasurer O'Beirne informed Justice Gerard that there was left in the treasury only $11,000, the money having been collected and disbursed within the last few months. Mr. Hearst and Congressman Levy have been unable to put an auditor on the books of the directors to learn what has become of the $29,000 apparently disbursed.

There are said to be many other cases where prominent men have been approached in the same manner as was Justice Gerard, on the false representation that the solicitor for the contribution was Mr. Hearst's secretary and came directly from Mr. Hearst, with a demand for a check.

ALL-NIGHT CARS IN SUBWAY NOW

Hereafter the cute little Tremont street subway will not be tucked away in it's little bed at 1 o'clock every morning and permitted to sleep until 5.30. It now has to be on the job twenty-four hours daily and Sunday, and General Bancroft has unlocked the doors for keeps and thrown away the key.

Which means that, beginning to-night the subway will be open all night as well as all day and that, instead of shivering in the Winter breezes, night workers and folks who have been up late at a dance or for other reasons, may wait for cars in the Adams square and other subway stations.

Under the new schedule the Reservoir via Huntington avenue and Brookline Village, the Ashmont and Milton cross-town, Newton via Beacon street and Harvard square, the Highland avenue, Somerville via Cambridge, Davis square, Malden, Medford, and Newton via East Cambridge and Prospect street cars will run through the subway instead of on the surface. Patrons who formerly boarded northbound surface cars at Adams square and along Washington street will now have to go to Adams square or some other subway station. Those on these lines who took southbound cars on Washington street, below Adams square, must now walk to Adams square or to the North Station. The Haymarket square subway station will not be open nights.

The Mattapan cars and Norfolk street cars will no longer be through cars either on the surface or through the subway, transfers to be made at Grove Hall.

MISS ATTERBURY AND J. A. TUCKERMAN WED

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

Weddings were well to the fore among society events to-day and that in New York of Miss Katherine Atterbury, daughter of John Turner Atterbury, and John A. Tuckerman of Boston, was the most important of all on the schedule. It took place in St. Thomas' Church at noon and was attended by many Bostonians. The invitations were mostly for the church, the reception at the Atterbury home, No. 13 West Forty-ninth street, being for relatives only, with the usual very limited number for intimate friends.

Among the attractive girls who served in the group of bridesmaids were Miss Edith Deacon, who weds George Lee Peabody in January; Miss Beatrice Pratt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt; Miss Nathalie M. Howland, sister of Mrs. Frederick Kernochan; Miss Beatrice Flagg, daughter of Mrs. John Turner Atterbury by her first marriage, and Miss Katherine Jones of Baltimore. Mrs. Dudley Rogers Howe of Boston, is matron of honor. Benjamin Joy of Boston was best man, and the ushers were Ledig Hoyt, Chalmers Wood, Jr., Aymar Johnson and Henry Morgan of New York; Dudley Rogers Howe, Rudolphe Weld, Roger Derby, Charles Appleton and Francis R. Appleton, Jr., of Boston and Russell Sard, of Albany. Mr. and Mrs. Tuckerman are to reside in Boston.

* * *

The second wedding to-day of much interest to both New York and Boston was that in the former city of Miss Gladys Durant Rice, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Rice to John Saltonstall, one of Boston's foremost bachelor club men. The wedding took place in [illegible] Church at Bedford village, in Westchester, and there were [illegible] ushers and only a limited number of people were asked to attend the ceremony and wedding breakfast. The Saltonstalls also will reside in Boston.

* * *

The engagement of a Harvard man attracting considerable interest is that of Walter Rupert Tuckerman, now of Washington, but identified with the fine old Boston family of that name. Mr. Tuckerman graduated from Harvard in '03 and is a member of the University, Chevy Chase and Metropolitan clubs, being considered one of the best-placed bachelors in capital society circles. His fiancee is Miss Edith Abercrombie Miller, daughter of the late Commander Frederick A. Abercrombie-Miller and Mrs. Abercrombie-Miller. The young girl has spent much of her life abroad, where she was as much admired as at home.

Mrs. William Hubbell Fisher of Cincinnati, has announced the engagement of her daughter, Florence, to Dr. Delbert L. Jackson of Boston. Dr. Jackson is a graduate of Dartmouth '04 and of Harvard Medical '08. Miss Fisher is a graduate of Smith College and a member of the College Club of this city.

The date for the fancy dress dance in honor of Miss Helen Hooper, the wealthiest of this year's debutantes, to be given at her Beacon street home, has been changed from the 19th of this month to the 20th, so that it will not conflict with the skating carnival which Miss Sarah Crocker is giving for her debutante nieces, the Misses Clara and Eleanor Crocker at the Boston Arena.

SCORE DRIVEN OUT IN 5 FIRES

Five fires within two hours early to-day kept the firemen throughout the city on the jump. A score of persons were driven into the street and [illegible] in a fire in Barton street in the West End. Another fire caused a scare in a Court street lodging house.

Two families were driven into the street by a fire in a liquor store on Tremont street, Roxbury, and a burglar who broke into a house on Dayton avenue, Roxbury, to steal a gas meter set the building on fire and endangered the lives of several persons. Policemen and firemen rescued seven horses during a blaze in a stable on Everett street, East Boston. In some instances the alarms followed each other so closely in the same fire districts that they answered as second alarms.

Saves Wife and Baby.

A score of persons fled panic-stricken over the roofs or groped their way down smoke-filled stairways to the street during a fire which caused a damage of $1,000 in the four-story brick tenement building at No. 39 Barton street, West End. Several were affected by the smoke and many had narrow escapes.

Dominick Marino, who lives on the top floor, was awakened to find the house filled with smoke. Snatching his three-months-old baby from his crib, Marino shouted to his wife to follow him. Mrs. Marino, however, was only semi-conscious and was unable to stand. Marino seized his wife about the waist and holding the baby in his other arm groped his way up the stairs to the roof and made his way to the adjoining building. He then returned to the burning building and found Miss Rose Elliot, his sister-in-law, unconscious in the hallway. He carried her also to the roof, where the cold air revived her.

Two Polish families living on the third floor were awakened by the crackling of the flames. Some fled down the stairs while others took to the roof. One of these ran barefooted through the snow to a fire box three blocks away and sent in an alarm.

The fire started in the synagogue of the Congregation Ein Jacob on the second floor. A meeting was held there last night and it is thought a candle left burning set fire to the draperies.

Thief Starts Blaze.

The lives of John Peterson and his family, living in the two and a half story wooden dwelling house at No. 9 Dayton avenue Roxbury, were endangered by fire early to-day, owing to the carelessness of a burglar who broke into the cellar and stole the gas meter.

After forcing an entrance into the building, the burglar lit a match to see his way across the cellar to the gas meter. After shutting off the gas he removed the meter, one of the quarter variety, and departed with it, dropping the lighted match into a quantity of excelsior. Peterson smelled smoke shortly afterward and found the cellar in flames. He aroused his family and sounded an alarm. The firemen confined the fire to the cellar and the damage was less than $100. It was not until after the fire had been extinguished that it was discovered the gas meter had been stolen.

Two families living on the upper floors of the three-story wooden dwelling at No. 1593 Tremont street, Roxbury, were forced to flee to the street, early to-day, during a fire which caused a damage of $200 in the liquor store of James Mee[illegible] on the first floor of the building. Several narrowly escaped being overcome by smoke. All suffered from exposure to the cold.

A policeman discovered the fire and sounded an alarm. He then returned to the building and after awakening the occupants assisted them to the street. The firemen succeeded in confining the blaze to the liquor store.

Fire in Lodging House.

Twelve men asleep in the four-story brick lodging house at No. 161 Court street, were driven from their beds by fire early to-day, but rather than expose themselves to the cold they remained in the building until the firemen had extinguished the fire. Charles P. Rolfe, who runs the lodging house, smelled smoke and traced it to the kitchen, where he discovered the chimney was on fire. He aroused the lodgers, and turned in an alarm. When the firemen arrived they found the flames had gone up through the chimney to the upper floors of the building. The lodgers were doing their best to extinguish the blaze with pans of water, but they were supplanted by the firemen, who quickly confined the fire to the chimney.

Seven horses were rescued by policemen and firemen during a fire which caused a damage of $1,000 in the two-story wooden stable of George J. Park, No. 41 Everett street, East Boston, early to-day.

A policeman discovered flames bursting through a rear window. He sounded an alarm, then returned to the stable and with the assistance of several persons forced the doors. By this time the firemen had arrived. They groped their way through the smoke to the stalls.

The horses were terrified by the flames and the firemen were obliged to blind them with blankets before they could be led out of the stable. What caused the blaze is not known. The fire started in the rear of the stable on the first floor and burned rapidly into the floor above. Several wagons and harnesses were destroyed. Several times the fire threatened to spread to adjoining buildings.

Blaze in Charlestown.

Fire caused a damage of $[illegible] in the one and two-story wooden buildings in rear of 68 Roland street, Charlestown, owned and occupied by the Eastern Metal and Refining Company. An adjoining stable also took fire. Thirteen horses were taken out of this stable by policemen before the firemen arrived. They kept the flames from spreading beyond the two wooden buildings and the stable was only slightly damaged.

Beck, general counsel for the company in the defence of the suit brought by the Federal Government for a dissolution of the company under the Sherman anti-trust law.

BROCKTON HAS OPERA NIGHT

Music lovers of Brockton gave convincing proof last night of the success that has met the efforts of the Popular Opera Club to draw attention to the desirability of the lower priced seats at the Boston Opera House. Last night was "Brockton Night" at the opera, and nearly every seat in the lower priced sections were occupied.

People interested in grand opera, but who have considered it a luxury they could not afford, will have their views changed when they hear the statements made by members of the Brockton opera party. The members purchased seats that sold from $1 to $2, and there was not a person who sat in the first or second balconies but who declared he heard perfectly the voices of the singers, and that the slight removal from the stage gave the voices a softer and more harmonious blending with the music of the symphony orchestra.

In fact, so enthusiastic were the Brockton members of the Popular Opera Club over the seats and the arrangements made by the club for their comfort and enjoyment, that weekly club parties will be given.

Alderman Heads Party.

A special car was arranged for by the BOSTON AMERICAN when it became known that a large party would attend the opera from Brockton. This newspaper formed the Popular Opera Club two weeks ago and since its organization a number of cities, including Lynn and Malden, have given club nights at the opera.

Henry A. [illegible], president of the Board of Aldermen of Brockton, headed the club party last night as the official representative of Mayor William H. Clifford. Alderman Littlefield was accompanied by Councilman Harry Lewis.

The special car left [illegible] at 6 o'clock, comfortably filled. The twenty-mile run to the Boston Opera House was made in exactly two hours. As each member had purchased their seats early in the day at Stanert's music store, No. [illegible] Main street, there was no delay at the box office, and ticket holders were in their places just as the curtain went up.

The opera "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was on. Alderman Littlefield expressed the feelings of the whole party when he said, in describing the advantage of the lower priced seats:

"After this I shall always purchase a seat in the $2 section when I come to hear good opera. I have sat in the orchestra and in boxes on other occasions. I am glad that I joined the Popular Opera Club and was given a seat in the balcony at a lower price than I had previously paid, for I got a better appreciation of the opera than ever before."

Harry [illegible] Howard, Mayor-elect of Brockton, attended the opera, but not with the club members. He said he intended joining the club and will get up a party to join the [illegible] party. Alderman Littlefield and Councilman Lewis expressed a desire to go with Doughty, and they will take their wives with them.

RUSSIAN DANCERS WILL APPEAR WITH OPERA COMPANY

Pavlowa and Mordkin, the famous Russian dancers, have been engaged for two appearances with the Boston Opera Company and will dance on the nights of December 22 and 23. As December 22 falls on Thursday and this was the only date for which the dancers could be secured, the Wednesday evening subscription night will be transferred to Thursday night and subscribers and box holders who have tickets for Wednesday night can use them Thursday night. The Russian dancers will make their second appearance at the Friday subscription night. On both occasions the dancers will follow a performance of one of the shorter operas to be announced later.

Pavlowa and Mordkin were not included in the list of artists announced to the subscribers and box holders, but the management has been able to secure them and adds them to its operatic attractions.

You see the AMERICAN everywhere—in the homes, clubs, restaurants, hotels cars and boats.

WALTHAM CHURCH JANITOR MET WOMAN NEAR GLOVER LAUNDRY

REMEMBERS THE EVENT, HE TESTIFIES BECAUSE "SHE WAS IN SUCH A HURRY."

where she left off at adjournment yesterday. She was questioned by Attorney Johnson:

Q.—Did you ever see Mrs. Glover using firearms while you were at her home? A.—Yes, when Mr. Glover was cleaning his revolver.

Q.—Did you ever see her shoot a revolver? A.—Yes.

Q.—How many times? A.—I should say three times.

Q.—What did you ever see her shoot? A.—A squirrel.

Q.—Where? A.—In the [illegible] the house.

Q.—What happened [illegible]—it fell dead.

Q.—In [illegible] Yes.

Q.—What [illegible] think a revolver.

The witness [illegible] District Attorney [illegible] the jury [illegible] plained [illegible] in the laundry [illegible] way from it to the [illegible].

The next witness was [illegible] of No. 349 [illegible] street, [illegible]. She testified that she lived at No. 221 Adams street, Waltham, from 1898 to 1901.

Q.—Did Mr. and Mrs. Glover live there for a time? A.—Yes, as near as I can remember they came to live in 1899, and they were there for two years.

Discussed Mr. Glover.

Q.—Did you have any talk with Mrs. Glover about Mr. Glover at that time? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Before or after their marriage? A.—Both.

Q.—Were they living together both before as well as after their marriage? A.—Apparently they were.

Q.—Tell what talk you had with her about him just before they were married? A.—I remember one talk distinctly. She called him a very bad man. She said he could not keep a servant without being friendly with her. I asked her why she was going to marry him. She said he had control of her property. They said they had been married in June, 1900. This was in the Spring of that year.

Q.—What kind of apartments had they? A.—A second-story flat.

Q.—Was any one living with them? A.—No.

The witness was not cross-examined.

Superintendent Keating of the Waltham telephone exchange was recalled as the next witness. He said that he had made a mistake in his previous testimony and that Charles Giddings was on duty between 7 and 9 in the evening of November 20, 1909. He was cross-examined by Mr. Higgins.

Q.—At the inquest held soon after this occurrence did any of the employes refuse to talk on account of the rule against it? A.—No.

Q.—Did any of them tell you personally that such a call of thirty minutes' duration had not been handled that night? A.—No.

Mr. Johnson then asked in redirect examination:

Q.—Did anyone tell you that there had been such a call? A.—No.

The next witness was John Delaney. He testified that he had lived in Waltham for twenty-one years and was in the ice business.

Q.—Did you go to the Glover house in the Spring of 1909? A.—Yes. I went there to deliver a load of laundry. Mrs. Glover was on the lawn hanging out some clothes. She asked me if I wanted a girl. I said no. First she asked me if I could talk French. I said no. Then she said that I and this girl were no match because the girl only spoke French.

The witness was not cross-examined.

Dr. Horatio Pratt, of the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary, was the next witness. He testified that he was the senior house surgeon and had a wide experience in treating eyes.

Q.—Did you examine Hattie's eyes? A.—Yes, October 12, for the first time, then again three days later and several times after that in fitting the glasses. This morning I examined them again. The first thing I did was to take the vision of both eyes and I found that she had a very deficient vision.

Q.—What was the condition of her eyes compared with the normal eye? A.—These are very low [illegible] with such low vision, unless there were cataracts on the eyes.

Q.—Were you able to correct it? A.—I tried to, but only partly succeeded.

Watched by Elmore.

Michael P. Valley was the next witness. He said that he was the Waltham laundry agent and had been for many years.

Q.—Do you remember the day of Mr. Glover's funeral? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you go to the Glover house that day? A.—Yes. I went in the house about five minutes of ten.

Q.—What part of the house did you go into? A.—I went up [illegible] the [illegible].

Q.—Who was in the room when you went [illegible]? A.—[illegible].

Q.—Where [illegible]? A.—[illegible] the head of the [illegible].

Q.—What happened after you went into the [illegible]? A.—I went into the [illegible] as far as the bed and [illegible].

Q.—What did you notice when you came out? A.—I noticed that Mrs. Glover and Mr. Elmore were [illegible] at him.

Q.—You came out of the room on the [illegible] said to you? [illegible] A.—Yes.

Q.—And you heard Mr. Elmore and Mr. [illegible] you came out? A.—Yes.

The witness was not cross-examined.

Saw a Woman in Alley.

[illegible] was the next witness. He said that he was janitor of several churches in Waltham, [illegible] the Lyric [illegible] and the First Baptist Church, [illegible] Moody street.

Q.—Do you remember November 20, 1909, that you were at the First Baptist Church? A.—I was.

Q.—Where did you go [illegible]? A.—I went from the church to the Woolworth Block. I was janitor of that block [illegible].

Q.—You were near the Woolworth's building, where the [illegible] store is? A.—Yes.

Q.—And the entrance to the driveway of the laundry leads from there? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you go into that alleyway there that evening? A.—I did.

Q.—What time was it? A.—I know it was after half-past eight.

Q.—What did you see in that alleyway? A.—I saw a woman coming from the direction of the laundry.

Q.—Where was the woman when you first caught sight of her? A.—Near Janes's stable and near the electric light pole.

Not Hattie Le Blanc.

Q.—In what direction was the woman going? A.—She was coming toward Moody street.

Q.—Tell us just how she acted. A.—She was just abreast of the electric pole and was going along at a quick [illegible]. I met her half way down the alley and she passed me quickly.

Q.—Did you know who she was? A.—I did not.

Q.—Describe the woman's appearance? A.—She was about five feet five inches in height, weighed 130 or 135 pounds and wore a three-quarters coat of dark material.

Q.—What was the color of the coat? A.—Well, it might have been a blue, a blue black, or black. I couldn't tell exactly in the dark.

Q.—Did you get a view of her face? A.—I did not.

Attorney Johnson then asked that Hattie be brought to the witness stand. Deputy Rhoades brought her to within a few feet of the witness stand. Hattie stood rigid with her hands clasped at her side.

Q.—Is that the person you met in the alleyway that night? A.—That is not the person.

The witness was then cross-examined.

Told Story Last March.

Q.—You are the janitor of the Baptist church? A.—Yes.

Q.—Byron R. Johnson, father of the attorney for the defence, is a member of that church, is he not? A.—Yes.

Q.—Is he a friend of yours? A.—Yes.

Q.—He is leader of the church, isn't he? The witness hesitated and Attorney Johnson broke in and said: "He isn't if you ought to know."

Q.—What other building are you in charge of? A.—There is another building in Moody street, about three blocks from Crescent.

Q.—Is Sergeant Curtin a member of the church? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you talk about this case to him? A.—No, sir, never.

Q.—Didn't you hear about the inquest and the preliminary hearing and the arrest of this defendant? A.—Yes, I heard of them.

Q.—When did you first tell this story? A.—I told Mr. Johnson and another gentleman some time in March, I think it was. I'm not sure of the time.

Q.—What time were you at the church? A.—I got there a little after 8, fixed the fire and looked around to see that all the lights were out and stayed there about twenty minutes I should think.

Q.—Then you went right down to the Woolworth Block? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you see a carriage in the passageway? A.—No.

Woman in Great Hurry.

Q.—Did you go in the stable? A.—No.

Q.—Was the passageway all clear or did you have to get under a fence or a board to cross it? A.—I don't remember any fence or board.

Q.—Did you pass anyone between the church and the alley? A.—Undoubtedly I did, but I don't remember any of them.

Q.—Did you meet anyone you knew? A.—No.

Q.—What time were you in the passage? A.—I should say between half-past eight and twenty minutes of nine.

Q.—Did you talk to Mr. Keating, of the State police, about this not long ago? A.—Yes.

Q.—How did you describe the woman to him? A.—I said she was pretty tall, and she was more on the lean than on the fat.

Q.—Did you say she was tall? A.—Yes, I think so.

Q.—Didn't you say she was tall and slim? A.—No, I think not.

Q.—Have you ever seen that woman before or since to your knowledge? A.—No.

Q.—What fastened this particular woman in your mind? A.—The fact that she was in such a hurry.

Michael J. Corrigan was the next witness. He testified that he was a [illegible] at No. 60 Crescent street, Waltham, and that he knew Glover for seven or eight years.

Q.—Did you see Mr. Glover on the night of November 20, 1909? A.—Yes, on Crescent street, between 7 and 7:30.

Glover Wore Auto Coat.

Q.—Was he walking or riding? A.—Riding.

Q.—Did you see how he was dressed? A.—He had a light colored coat on and a cap.

The witness was then cross-examined.

Q.—What kind of a coat was it? A.—A brown automobile coat.

Q.—You don't describe it as an ordinary overcoat then, do you? A.—No.

Q.—Was it an ordinary automobile coat? A.—Yes.

Q.—And it was not an ordinary overcoat? A.—No.

Mellen V. Smart, for seventeen years a police officer of Bridgewater, testified to the length of time it took him to walk from the Waltham laundry to the Glover house, going by way of Moody street, by the railroad station, and through Parker, Elm, Central, Newton and Barton streets, through an open field to the Glover house. He said it took him fourteen minutes, and he was walking at the rate of twenty minutes to the mile.

Returning by the same route, but swinging into Crescent street from Moody, took him sixteen and three-quarter minutes, he testified. By a third route, cutting through the Common and going down through Crescent street to Gifford avenue, took him fifteen minutes. He was not cross-examined.

Thomas J. Cuniff, for twenty-one years a photographer in Waltham, was the next witness to be questioned by Mr. Johnson.

"Too Many Rubbers Here."

Q.—Do you recall where you were on the night of November 20, 1909? A.—I was on Crescent street near the Hall & Lyon drug store.

Q.—What time in the evening? A.—Between 7:45 and 8 o'clock.

Q.—What did you notice? A.—I noticed a man and woman cross over from Hall & Lyon's drug store and start down Gifford avenue.

Q.—Did you hear anything said? A.—The woman said, "Isn't there a better way." The man said, "Come along." The woman said, "There are too many rubbers here."

Q.—What then? A.—They went down Gifford avenue.

Q.—And where did you go? A.—I went over by the Hubbard Piano store and then remained on Central street until 9 o'clock waiting for a young lady relative.

Q.—And then? A.—About 9 o'clock I walked up Crescent street toward my home on Prospect street.

Q.—Did you pass Gifford avenue on the way? A.—I did.

Q.—What did you notice, if anything, unusual? A.—I saw a man leaning against a stone wall about thirty-five feet down from Crescent street.

Q.—Did you hear anything? A.—He called out to me, and I passed by.

Q.—Then you went home? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you meet anyone on the way? A.—Yes, I met Mr. Connors just after I passed Gifford avenue.

The witness was not cross-examined.

Car Starter Takes Stand.

Isaac Walker, a car starter employed by the Middlesex & Boston Street Railway Company at the Moody street crossing, was the next witness. He said he was sixty years old.

Q.—Where were you on the night of November 20, 1909? A.—At Moody and Crescent streets.

Q.—Your station is at the bridge there in Moody street? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Were you at work that night? A.—No, sir, I had just come from Boston.

Q.—Do you recall where you were about 8:30 o'clock? A.—Yes, I was in a barber shop in Crescent street.

Q.—And after you left the barber shop? A.—I went down Crescent street to Moody street to get a car.

Q.—What then? A.—I just missed the car and I walked down Moody street toward the bridge.

Q.—What time was it then? A.—It was just thirteen minutes of nine.

Q.—Were the stores open and their windows all lighted? A.—Yes, sir.

Steered by a Red Light.

Q.—State what happened further? A.—I saw the red light at the bridge set against the car that I was trying to get. I knew that I could walk down and catch the car so I walked right along.

Q.—Did you notice anything in particular? A.—As I passed the driveway leading by the Tea store to the laundry yard a man was standing at the corner smoking and a woman was coming out at a good gait. She went to the car and I got on just behind her.

Q.—Where did she sit? A.—She sat opposite the third window on the left. I sat on the right down near the conductor.

Q.—Was your attention attracted in particular to this woman? A.—Yes.

Q.—By what? A.—She was nervous and shifty. Her face was flushed and she appeared frightened.

Q.—When did the car make its first stop? A.—It made its first regular stop at Carter street.

Q.—This is near the Common? A.—Yes.

Q.—What time was this? A.—Ten minutes of 9 exactly.

Q.—How do you know? A.—The curfew bell rang just then, and I pulled out my watch to see what time I was. It was just eight minutes of 9 by my watch when the curfew was ringing.

Q.—Well, go on, what happened? A.—A gentleman with a valise got off and then the lady got up and got off.

Q.—Where did she go? A.—She went through the gap in the Common fence and started off toward Main street on the path across the Common.

Followed the Woman.

Q.—Did you get off? A.—Yes, the woman acted in such a strange manner that I decided to follow her.

Q.—And did you follow her? A.—I did.

Q.—Where did she go? A.—She went halfway across the Common and then she turned down on another path toward the depot. Then she went up Elm street and into Central street.

Q.—Well, what happened then? A.—On Central street she met a man and hurried up to him.

Q.—And you were walking behind? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you hear her say anything? A.—She said to the man, "Why, Mr. Elm——"

"Hold on, hold on," said Mr. Higgins. A conference was held between counsel and Judge Bond and the court decided that anything he heard said by the woman should be excluded.

Q.—Where did they go then, the man and the woman? A.—They flew along Central street.

"They flew; did they have an airship?" asked Mr. Higgins.

"They walked rapidly," said the witness in answer.

Q.—Where did they go then? A.—They went along Central street to Newton street and then crossed over into Barton street. On Barton street they separated, the woman taking the right sidewalk and the man the left sidewalk.

Still Shadowing Woman.

Q.—Did you follow? A.—I followed the woman.

Q.—Where did she go? A.—When she got to the light at the corner of Barton and Townsend street she started on a run through the open field and dodged behind a fence.

Q.—What became of the man? A.—The last I saw of him he was going up Townsend street to Main street. The man went up Townsend to Main, and there turned to the right and turned into a yard, and I lost sight of him behind the house.

Q.—Did you know whose house that was? A.—No, but I have learned since. It belongs to Mr. Glover.

Q.—Are you an Englishman? A.—Well, it's hard telling. My great-great-grandmother and my great-great-grandfather came over in the Mayflower in 1620.

Mr. Johnson then said: "Deputy Rhoades will you please escort the defendant in front of the witness." Hattie took her place in front of the witness and Johnson asked:

Q.—Is that the woman? A.—No, sir, I followed a woman and not a child.

District Attorney Higgins then cross-examined.

Q.—What time was it when you came in the court room? A.—Between eighteen and twenty minutes of eleven.

Q.—Did you look at your watch? A.—No.

Guided by Curfew Bell.

Q.—There are sometimes, then, that you don't look at your watch? A.—Yes, there are.

Q.—What time did this car arrive at the Crescent street stop. A.—I don't know that it has any regular time there.

Q.—What time is it due at the railroad crossing? A.—There isn't any regular time at the railroad crossing.

Q.—Did you take the time before that? A.—What do you mean?

Q.—Did you take it before the car crossed the crossing? A.—What do you mean, "take the car before I got on it?" No, of course not.

Mr. Johnson cautioned the witness only to answer what was asked him.

Q.—Well, when did you take the train? A.—After the car crossed the bell struck for ten minutes of 9, and I looked at my watch and it was eight minutes of.

Q.—Did anyone get off before the car crossed the crossing of the railroad? A.—What, get off before the railroad and have to walk across the track! No, sir; we give better accommodation than that.

Q.—Well, I'm glad to hear that. What time was it that you were at the entrance to the alley leading to the laundry? A.—About eleven minutes of. I didn't look at my watch.

Q.—What time was it when you were in the barber shop? A.—It was twenty-two minutes of by the clock and twenty by my watch.

Q.—Your watch was fast then? A.—Yes, I keep it two minutes fast.

Doesn't Forget the 4 a. m.

Q.—How old are you? A.—I was born the first day of June, 1845, at 4 o'clock in the morning. You can figure it out for yourself.

Q.—Well, I want you to tell us. A.—Well, I am 65 the first day of last June at 4 o'clock in the morning.

Q.—Who else was in the barber shop? A.—I can't tell.

Q.—Were you a pretty well known character out there? A.—I suppose so. I am in a position to make me pretty well known.

Q.—Well, everybody knows you, don't they? A.—I don't know; I never asked them.

Q.—Do you know who the conductor was on that car? A.—No.

Q.—Did you try to find out? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you ask a man if he was Gallagher, a conductor? A.—I think I did.

Q.—Was his name Doherty? A.—It might have been.

Q.—When did you inquire as to that conductor? A.—I couldn't tell you that. I am glad to tell you all I can, but I can't tell that.

Q.—Well, when was it? Can't you tell us approximately? A.—It might have been four or five weeks ago.

Q.—Then do I understand that up to four or five weeks ago you made no inquiries about the conductor? A.—Yes; you're right; you've got it now.

Q.—Did you talk to anyone else about this incident? A.—Of course I did.

Q.—When? A.—The next day, the following Sunday, do you understand?

The Starter Explains It.

Q.—I am trying to. A.—You're making a bluff at it.

"I am not sure I understand what day he means?" said Judge Bond.

"Your Honor, I said 'the following Sunday.' The next day was Sunday, so the following Sunday was the next day. Isn't that right, Your Honor?"

Attorney Johnson again cautioned the witness to be careful to answer only what was asked.

Q.—Do you know any of the Waltham police? A.—No.

Q.—Did you talk to Harry Doherty about two weeks after this about the matter? A.—Not if I know the man.

Q.—Didn't you try to find the conductor of the car in two weeks? A.—Yes.

Q.—Didn't you talk to a conductor of a car named Harry Doherty? A.—If that be his name, I did.

Q.—Was the car late that night? A.—I don't know whether it was a regular or a special. If it was a regular it was late.

Q.—How late? A.—When I came out of the barber shop the car was just about due to start from Central square.

Q.—And when was that? A.—Eight-forty-five.

Q.—Did you see where the woman came from? A.—Yes, she came out of the alley.

Defence Rests Its Case.

Q.—Did you look down the passageway? A.—Not clear down. I looked about three or four feet.

Q.—Where was the woman when you first saw her? A.—She was about two feet down the passage. I might have been ten feet away.

Attorney Johnson then asked in re-direct examination.

Q.—Mr. Higgins asked you if you told anyone about this, and you said you told a woman the following day. Who was that? A.—My nephew's wife.

Q.—Did you tell anyone else about it? A.—Yes.

Q.—(By Mr. Higgins) When did you see Mr. Johnson about this. A.—A week or ten days before the case came up.

The morning recess was taken at this point.

After recess B. M. Young, a deputy sheriff, testified that he had attempted to serve a summons on Tobey Le Blanc for Mr. Johnson, but could find no trace of the man. Attorney Johnson said: "With the exception of the witnesses of whom I have spoken to your Honor and the District Attorney and any others whom I have forgotten that may be called to my attention, the defence rests."

This was at 11:29 o'clock. A recess was then taken.

ALICE MORRILL INTERPRETER

LILLIAN LE BLANC

sister of Hattie Le Blanc and French interpreter at trial.

LITTLE LE BLANC GIRLS PRAYED FOR MRS. GLOVER

You are so good. You are so good, heaven is for you. I say a mass for you every day and so do all the children. The slippers you sent I am keeping for my first communion. Mamma is very glad to know you are having Henrietta, Irene and Lillian go to church, but she says they are good enough girls now to go to church without being sent by anyone. Mamma speaks and says she is in very good luck to find a good woman like you to take care of her little girls.—Part of letter written to Mrs. Glover by Eva Le Blanc, Hattie's little sister at West Arichat.

Examination in Rebuttal.

District Attorney Higgins asked the court for half an hour to prepare rebuttal testimony and a recess was taken.

After the recess Henry M. Doherty was called to the stand in rebuttal. He testified that he was a conductor on the Middlesex and Boston street railway line.

Q.—On the night of November 20, 1909, what time did your car arrive at Crescent street and Central square? A.—Between 8:43 and 8:45 p. m.

Q.—Do you know Isaac Walker? A.—I did not until three weeks before this trial.

Q.—Do you remember seeing an excited woman get on your car that night? A.—No.

Q.—Do you remember seeing Isaac Walker that night? A.—No.

Q.—Was your car on time? A.—Yes.

Mr. Johnson cross-examined:

Q.—What cars run along this line between Crescent and Main streets. A.—That is the main line, and cars go in different directions and to different places.

Q.—Have you your car report with you? A.—Yes.

Q.—Referring to your report what was your time that night at Newton. A.—Eight fifteen arrive, and eight seventeen depart.

Q.—Have you any record of your time at the stop between Crescent and Main streets? A.—No.

Says Alley Was Blocked.

Q.—Will you say that Mr. Walker or an excited woman did not get on your car, or that your car was not delayed by a red signal at the railroad track, or that you did not stop at Carter and Charles streets? A.—No.

Q.—(By Mr. Higgins)—Were you on time? A.—Yes; and if on time, we got to Crescent street about 8:43.

Q.—(By Mr. Johnson)—Is Saturday night a busy night? A.—Yes, usually.

Q.—About 8:43, if you're on time? A.—Yes.

Q.—Was your car on time at Roberts street? A.—No; four minutes late.

Q.—It was late there then? A.—Yes.

Q.—There are very few stops, are there not, after Central square? A.—Well, not many; Main and South streets have a good many, though.

Q.—There are long stretches for you to make good speed, aren't there? A.—Yes.

Officer Pulley was then recalled in rebuttal.

Q.—I call your attention to the passageway leading from Moody street to the Waltham laundry between the Wadsworth Block and to Higgins Block. Did you notice anything about it on the night of November 20, 1909. A.—It was blocked up.

Didn't See a Redface.

Q.—How was it blocked? A.—There were two posts in the ground at the head of the alley right near Moody street, and a two by four plank across blocking the passageway. The board was two or three feet from the ground and covered practically the end of the alley. The edge of the board came within two or three inches of the buildings on either side.

Q.—Can you tell us whether you passed the head of that alleys on Moody street during that evening? A.—Yes, I rang in at Pine street and left there at 8:30 and passed the alley at 8:32. I went to the Moody street bridge and waited there a little while, and I came back past the alley again at about 8:38 to 8:40.

Q.—Did you see anything of a woman running out in an excited condition—a woman with a red face running out of that alley into Moody street while you were at the Moody street bridge or upon the two occasions when you passed and re-passed it. A.—No, sir.

Mr. Johnson cross-examined.

Q.—How many people were there on that side of Moody street that night? A.—I should say a thousand.

Q.—I don't suppose that you pretended to notice all of those people. A.—No, sir.

Q.—And there may have been forty women who came out of the alley that you did not see? A.—Yes, sir.

Barrier Was Up and Down.

Q.—When was the passageway blocked? A.—From the last of October until December.

Q.—Didn't Mr. Hanley's janitor, Mr. Graves, knock it down several times? A.—Yes.

Q.—And didn't Mr. Higgins put it up again? A.—Yes. It was down after and before the night of November 20, 1909, but it was not down that night.

Q.—How do you know it was not? A.—I saw for a positive fact that it was up because of the teams.

Inspector McKenna then took the stand and was examined by Mr. Higgins.

Q.—Did you meet Mr. Keating of the telephone company and Mr. Giddings, the operator, when you were investigating the matter of telephone calls from the Glover house? A.—I did.

Q.—And this was when? A.—On November 26.

Q.—What did Mr. Giddings tell you in relation to any particular calls between the Glover house and Auburndale? A.—He said the Glover's was a flat rate telephone, and that no record whatever was kept of their calls.

Q.—Did he have any recollection of a lengthy Saturday night call? A.—He said he had none.

Q.—Did he say that the rules of the company prohibited him from talking? A.—He did not say.

Mrs. Glover Is Recalled.

Q.—Did you notice that barrier across the passageway on Saturday night? A.—I was not down there Saturday night.

Q.—When did you first go down there? A.—Early Sunday morning.

Q.—Was the passageway blocked up then? A.—It was—with a rail nailed to two posts.

The witness then identified two automobile coats that were shown him as the coats found in the automobile on Spruce street shortly after the tragedy on the night of it.

Attorney Johnson cross-examined the witness.

Q.—Did you take any measurements of this barrier across the passageway? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you make any report at the station about it? A.—I did not.

Q.—And you were sent out to investigate everything in connection with the shooting and this passage way led direct to the laundry? A.—Yes.

Mrs. Lillian M. Glover then took the stand. She was dressed in a heavy black broadcloth suit and a black velvet turban with black feathers. Her furs were of black bearskin. She looked tired and her voice had a perceptible tremor as she answered the questions of the District Attorney.

DR. BERLE'S REVIEW OF LE BLANC TRIAL

Reviewing the progress of the Le Blanc trial to date, Rev. Dr. A. A. Berle, pastor of the Shawmut Congregational Church of Boston, is of the opinion that several persons upon whom the limelight of the Cambridge court has been focused might have been capable of committing the Waltham tragedy. For the benefit of the readers of the BOSTON AMERICAN Mr. Berle, who is a student of sociology, comments on the case which is just making criminal history.

By THE REV. DR. A. A. BERLE.

The progress of the trial of Hattie Le Blanc nears a point where the jury will weigh the evidence and decide the fate of the girl in the dock.

Despite the ruling out of important testimony upon which the District Attorney relied and upon which he necessarily had to depend a great deal, for the interpretation of his case and its logical development, the entire atmosphere of the case and the relation of all the parties to it, show that there are several persons connected with this gruesome and noisome group, any one of which might have been capable, given suitable conditions and provocation, of committing a crime like this.

Legal Interest of Case.

As the trial goes on the case is attracting more and more interested attention from the lawyers, who are discussing with eagerness and zest the various aspects of the trial, from the rulings of the judge to the clashes of counsel and the use of the evidence of the previous hearings.

There are one or two phases of this aspect of the case which need clearing up in the public mind. One of these is the fact that Mr. Higgins, the District Attorney, is in a semi-judicial position himself, which necessarily places limitations upon him which do not rest upon the counsel for defendant. If he performed his duty, and there is no reason to suppose otherwise, the indictment against Hattie Le Blanc was brought about because by a process of examination and elimination he could bring in no other. The District Attorney has no choice but to bring in an accusation which he believed to be true, and he had to bring before a Grand Jury the evidence upon which this belief of his rested.

This must mean that he considered the possibility of indicting any other person who might be suspected of the murder or who might be thought to have a sufficient motive and opportunity for such a deed. With the evidence before him, both that which could be got into the case and that which has been excluded, among the latter the dying declaration of Clarence Glover, "Hattie Le Blanc shot me," he came to the conclusion that she was the guilty party. This, of course, involved that he had to believe in the innocence of any other party as respects this particular crime.

Twists of the Law.

But such is the curious course of justice, that before the public and the jury, he has been placed in the position of defending the woman whom the counsel for the prisoner has pronounced the "vampire."

This shows how a single ruling of the Court may give an utterly different turn to events and absolutely change the accent of the case. That this should prove especially severe upon the district attorney's case goes without saying. That is, should place him in the false position of seeming to defend another person and that person a not specially admirable character, is a positive hardship. And this is especially true, when it is recalled that his position is semi-judicial in character that he is against nobody specially nor for anybody specially, but represents the public welfare in the form of the State, trying to get at the truth.

Many lawyers have remarked this odd phase of things and have deplored the fact that the case has thus been swung out of its natural channels and has seemed in some of its developments anything but a trial for murder.

Atmosphere of Criminality.

But one thing remains absolutely beyond the possibility of any legal twist to alter, and that is that here you have revealed one of those foul pools of sordidness, nastiness and criminality in which there is hardly a single redeeming feature.

All the parties were apparently of a type whose presence in a community is a menace to its social health and its moral interests. As the actors in this strange and shameful drama pass in review, there is not one of them that presents any wholesome features, not a single ray of brightness or cleanliness in the whole wretched mess; just all filthy, selfish and unclean. They don't even hang together in their shameless performances. In the crisis it is simply each for himself without the loyalties which distinguish even some of the lower animals.

As a human exhibit, this is a pitiful sight. If it could be shown that some of these people had been driven to criminality by poverty, by dire need of some kind, or even that the vileness was not habitual, calculated, needlessly filthy, or that sudden passion had driven somebody to something unusual, however bad, one might feel some sort of feeling for the humanity of it. But it is simply an unrelieved picture of vile living and acting, selfish, greedy, without shame and without any limit.

Deepening Mystery.

And so the mystery which already had shrouded this case in a mass of uncertainties, conjectures and vague guesses, grows deeper and more profound. That the case, as it goes to the jury, can have any intelligible, connected presentation seems almost impossible. That twelve men sworn to consider fairly all this mass of conflicting, nauseating stuff and remain in any attitude of mind, which can be described by the terms "beyond reasonable doubt" seems next to impossible.

And yet even here, who can tell? The scrutiny of these twelve men suggests many things to the inquiring mind. After all in this world of ours, evidence as it leaves men's lips is one thing. As it is translated into the vernacular of any particular man's life experience and moral and intellectual dialect, it may indicate something very different from what the words seem to say.

We unconsciously, in our daily intercourse with men, give different values to the same speech when heard from the lips of different men. So it often is with evidence. Whom will the jury believe, and how much and what? What will they pick out as of most importance and what relations will seem to them most determinative in making up their verdict? How will they regard contradictions and how will they thread their way through this maze of details, often blinding and then flashing out unexpectedly upon the dark spots of the tragedy?

This is what no man can tell at this moment, and because it is left thus hanging in the air the case gathers intensity as it goes on. In fact as the sensational and thrilling episodes drop out, the keen observer especially with some legal knowledge, feels the tenser struggle in the less sensational, but more important and subtler antagonisms, which lie just under the barest meaning of the testimony given in open court.

BUYS $2,900,000 FEE IN CHICAGO REALTY

CHICAGO, Dec. 10.—Mrs. Mollie Netcher, owner of the Boston store, has completed the largest downtown realty deal ever negotiated in Chicago. She bought for $2,900,000 from the estate of Levi Z. Leiter, the fee in the property occupied by Hillman's store at State and Washington streets. The deal brings Mrs. Netcher's real estate investments in that block up to $6,000,000. Since the death of her husband, Charles Netcher in 1904, she has become by reason of her executive ability and financial foresight, Chicago's leading business woman. Her latest deal gives her practical control of almost three-quarters of the block bounded by Madison, State, Washington and Dearborn streets.

FOUR TOWNS SEEK TO TAX SHAW MILLIONS

The executors and trustees of the millions left by the late Quincy A. Shaw, former head of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company are in a quandary because Boston, Brookline, Milton and Beverly assessors want to tax a major portion of the estate. Francis C. Welch, Quincy A. Shaw and Robert F. Herrick, the trustees, are willing to pay the taxes, but they don't know to whom to pay them. They have filed a bill in the Supreme Court asking for a decision on the rival claims of the cities and towns, as they are anxious to settle the matter in order to avoid the interest accounts which will incur by a delay.

ROYALTY FEARS DANCER'S EXPOSE

BERLIN, Dec. 10.—Germany stands on the brink of a social scandal compared to which Maximilian Harden's revelations of the "Knights of the Round Table," are tame.

Some of the most powerful families in Germany are shaking with apprehension lest Signora Maria Terragona, a Spanish dancer, be not prevented from publishing her memoirs. She threatens to expose incidents in the private lives of members of one of Germany's reigning families, of several officers of the Crown and other prominent men. Signora Terragona makes these threats in deadly earnest and will carry them out—unless the police leave her in peace.

The dancer has shown proof that she has known intimately members of almost every reigning family in Europe. She was a friend of King Leopold of Belgium, an acquaintance of King Edward of England, and an intimate of several royalties living.

The signora is twenty-nine years old and fascinating. Her first friend was an American steel magnate. Tarragona's father was from the Rhine country, her mother a Spaniard. The girl was studying Spanish dancing in Paris, when one night she returned music she had borrowed to the leader of the orchestra at Maxim's.

Her simple appearance and evident sprightness attracted the attention of several Americans seated around a table. Two were millionaires whose names are widely known on two continents. They invited the girl to drink a glass of champagne with them. Then one took her little tain purse and passed it around the table. Each man put in the largest banknote he had. When she counted it she found $600.

Next day the American who had made his millions in steel visited the girl. He invited her to a famous establishment, where he bought her clothes of the very latest fashion and then took her to a jeweler's and loaded her with pearls and diamonds. These pearls she still has; indeed, she seems to preserve a tender affection for her American admirer.

FRESNO MOB OUSTS "WORKERS OF WORLD"

FRESNO, Cal., Dec. 10.—A mob of citizens last night took the fight against the Industrial Workers of the World out of the hands of the police and drove the score of members of this order who are not in jail out of town. Their tents were burned and their red flags torn up for souvenirs. Those who attempted to speak on the streets were knocked down, taken to the outskirts of the city and told not to come back on pain of being tarred and feathered. An attempt to storm the jail was defeated by the refusal of the sheriff to give the keys. Members of the organization have been endeavoring to stir other workers in Fresno for a month with anarchistic speeches.

BALL ACQUITTED ON DEATH CHARGE

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 10.—The jury in the case of Albert F. Ball of this city, charged with the murder of Charles H. Fellows of Bow on the night of November 22, 1909, brought in a verdict of "not guilty." Ball showed no emotion. Neither did his wife, who has sat by his side during the trial. Both were confident throughout that he would be freed. Ball was immediately released.

Since John Quit Drinking

By John's Wife

I'm the happiest little woman,
In all this little town;
And my merry laugh and singing,
Takes the place of sigh and frown.
For JOHN HAS QUIT HIS DRINKING
And is like himself once more,
And the world is just a paradise
With such happiness in store!

One day I read some verses—
"Mary's Miracle," the name,
And I said, that's John exactly,
And I'll send and get the same.
So I sent for GOLDEN REMEDY,
(As sly as sly could be)
And I put it in John's supper
And I put it in his tea.

And it didn't taste a little bit;
Had no odor, so, you see—
It was smoothest kind of sailing
For little Doctor Me.
And I watched and prayed and waited,
(And cried some, too, I guess),
And I didn't have the greatest faith,
I'm ashamed now to confess.

And John never thought a minute,
He was being cured of drink,
And soon he's as well as any one,
It makes me cry to think!
Just makes me cry for gladness,
I'm so proud to be his wife—
Since he is cured of drinking,
And leads a nice, new life.

"Since John he quit a-drinking!"
I can't say it times enough!
And hates and loathes a liquor
As he would a poison stuff,
And when I say my prayers at night
As thankful as can be—
I pray for John the most of all—
Then GOLDEN REMEDY.

Jean Mitchell, 17-Year-Old Burglar Accomplice

Boston Girl Confesses to "Polite" Burglaries Here and in Other Cities.

Jean Mitchell, a seventeen-year-old Boston girl, has confessed to the police of Passaic, N. J., of "polite" burglaries committed in Boston and other cities by herself. She implicates "Kid" Howard, who is now in a Passaic hospital. Leased wire dispatches to the BOSTON AMERICAN today relate the strange story.

Told that the "Kid" is dying from a bullet wound he received Thursday night, and that he will die without being able to make any confession for himself, the girl has revealed their past in order, as she believes, to save the "Kid's" soul.

For four hours the Passaic police tried to extract a confession from Jean. The slender seventeen-year-old girl, scarcely more than a child, stuck to a story that she and James H. Hanley, as she first called him, were innocent.

Suddenly Police Superintendent Brown of Jersey City, who was present at this "third degree," leaned forward and said gently:

"Do you know that your sweetheart is dying and won't be able to speak for himself?"

It worked. The girl blanched.

"I love him, I love him!" she gasped. "Is he dying—he is dying, you say. Well, I will tell. I love Jim too much to have him go to his grave with any black marks on his slate. I'll tell you all I know of him since he and I have been together. He mustn't die without a confession being made for him. I will tell."

Worked in Store Here.

"My name is Jean Mitchell. Yes, that's my right name. I am seventeen years old, though I may look older. Two years ago in Boston I got a job in a store. I met Jim. His right name is James H. Hanley. He told me he was a traveling salesman. He made love to me and I loved him. He said he was married and would have to wait till he got a divorce before he could marry me.

"I went with him. I might as well admit it. I didn't know he was a burglar till one night in Boston, soon after I found I loved him.

"Jim said to me: 'I've got to make a "slough" to-night. I need the money.' Then he explained. He was going to break into a house.

"That very night Jim robbed a house in Boston. He was a 'polite' burglar. You know. We worked a 'supper' trick. That is, we worked from 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock at night, never earlier, never later, for that is the time when people are apt to be out at dinner if they dine away from home.

"I used to wear a decollete gown. He seldom went out without evening clothes. We always used a taxi. When Jim was shot was the first time we ever went without a taxi.

"I loved Jim better than life. I would do anything he wished. I would go anywhere with him. I love him only as a woman can love a man. He was good to me. I don't want him to die with all his past on his soul. That's why I tell all this now. You say he must die without speaking again.

"Where did we go from Boston? We went to Providence. Then we went to Philadelphia and worked around Germantown and Camden.

"Yes, Jim has done time. He told me himself that he had been in Charlestown and Baltimore prisons."

Shot by Sick Man.

Hanley has aliases. He is known as "Kid" Howard, Tom Wandlee and Charles Howard.

The arrest of the pair resulted from the attempt to break into the home of Theodore Tapley, a wealthy manufacturer, living at No. 108 Pennington avenue, Passaic. They chose 7 o'clock at night as the time. Mrs. Tapley was out. Mr. Tapley would have been out, too, only he is ill. But for that the attempt might have been successful. Even at that, the couple might have escaped, only Tapley's home has been robbed four times in six months, and the manufacturer now keeps a revolver under his pillow.

Tapley heard the front doorbell ring. Before he could get to the front door he heard his visitors walk away. He spied them from a window. Failing to recognize them as acquaintances, he suspected they might be thieves. He got his revolver and waited.

Five minutes later the rear bell rang. Tapley made no move. Then came a sharp crack from the direction of the parlor. Tapley crept downstairs, gun in hand. In the dim light he saw a man climbing through a parlor window. Through the window he caught sight of a girl waiting on the sidewalk. Tapley fired three times. The man fell back from the window without a cry. Tapley heard a feminine scream. He saw the girl rush to the man and help him walk away. Tapley was too ill and too overcome by excitement to do any more. When Mrs. Tapley came home she heard the story and reported the attempted break to the police.

The couple was then under arrest. The girl had assisted Hanley to a doctor's office, where a bullet wound in his right temple was bandaged. An ambulance was called, despite the girl's frantic request for a taxi. The couple was taken to St. Mary's Hospital. The girl said they had been held up by negroes, but the hospital surgeon called the police, who arrested the girl and finally succeeded in extracting her confession "to save Jim's soul."

BIGELOW WEEPS IN SANITY TEST

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—Arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct, Charles A. Bigelow, known as the "bald-headed comedian," whose songs about being "afraid to go home in the dark," were among the most popular features of the Anna Held shows for two seasons, is in the psychopathic ward in the Kings County Hospital, Brooklyn, under observation as to his sanity. He had been drinking heavily for several days and presented a pathetic figure as he sat among the "drunks and disorderlies" in Magistrate Tighe's court in Brooklyn.

Had $4,000 With Him.

Bigelow and his wife, Varella, have been estranged for some time. Mrs. Bigelow has been living in the apartment house at No. 137 Prospect park west, Brooklyn, with her father, her sister, Mme. Terrani, and her father-in-law, and it was there the alleged disorderly conduct which led to the arrest occurred last Tuesday night. Bigelow and his colored chauffeur are said to have appeared at the house. Bigelow, according to the complaint, entered the elevator, and, flourishing a revolver, demanded to be taken to his wife's apartments. When refused admission he abused and threatened his wife, it is alleged, and when the door was partly opened he shook a $4,000 roll of bills in her face, shouting:

"That is all you want me for, but you won't get a cent of it."

Broke Up Funeral.

While the rumps was going on a funeral was being held on the second floor and the services were interrupted while the forcible ejection of Bigelow was going on. On the following morning Bigelow's automobile was found abandoned in a snow drift a few blocks from the apartment house.

Bigelow came from England about eighteen years ago, making his debut in E. E. Price's "Little Christopher" as the detective. He has since appeared in "1492," "Evangeline," "The Girl From Paris," with Weber & Fields, Anna Held's companies and lately with "Alma, Where Do You Live?" A few weeks ago he quit the last named show and took to vaudeville.

WEST ENDERS WANT RIVERBANK SUBWAY

The West End Improvement Society through Myron E. Pierce, president, and Mitchell Freiman, secretary, have petitioned for the Riverbank subway with a station on Chestnut street. They resent the long delay in the construction of such a subway, for in the plan they see rapid transit to the downtown section and eventually the making of their district a better place to live in. With the Riverbank subway and the proposed subway from Park street to the South Station, the West Enders say they will be satisfied.

COUNT STRIKE VOTE OF 33,700 ENGINEERS

CHICAGO, Dec. 10.—A strike vote of 33,700 locomotive engineers employed on sixty-one Western railroads is being counted in Chicago to-day. It was predicted that the result of the balloting will show that from 90 to 98 per cent. of the engineers favor a strike. The men ask for an increase of about 15 per cent. and adjustment of a number of working conditions. An offer of about 9 per cent. increase was made by the railroads. This was refused and the strike referendum ordered.

FOSS RETURNS TO WASHINGTON

Governor-elect Foss is back in Washington to attend the annual dinner of the Gridiron Club, to be held to-night. The governor-elect before leaving said he had entirely recovered from his slight attack of indigestion. When asked about resuming his tour of the State he replied: "Oh, there's plenty of time to attend to Lodge between now and Jan. 17. I have invitations from all parts of the State, but have as yet made no plans for future meetings. I shall return to Boston probably on Monday."

RICH PACKER CUDAHY IS SERIOUSLY ILL

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 10.—John Cudahy, millionaire banker and packer of Chicago, is seriously ill here. Mr. Cudahy came West, accompanied by his son Gerald, several days ago, and immediately on his arrival in Los Angeles was compelled to take to his bed in the hotel. Friends who called on Mr. Cudahy were told by Gerald, it is said, that his father was too ill to see any one.

WAGES WAR ON BEEF TRUST NEXT

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—Attorney General Wickersham will take the Coal Trust case to the court of last resort.

He is highly pleased over the partial victory obtained by the Government Thursday in the action against the trust which was based on evidence furnished by William Randolph Hearst, and is eager to make the victory complete. As soon as the legal preliminaries can be arranged an appeal will be taken on all the points which were decided against the Government's contentions.

Officials at the Department of Justice declared that in the ruling against the Temple Iron Company the Government has won a substantial victory, and one which will be far-reaching in its consequences. In fact, one of them pointed out that in supplying the evidence on which to smash the Temple Iron Company Mr. Hearst likewise paved the way for the eventual dissolution of the Beef Trust.

Beef Trust in the Same Fix.

The National Packing Company, which is the other name of the Beef Trust, this official declared, is similar in every way to the Temple Iron Company. Said this official:

"The Temple Iron Company, organized in 1899, which is the crux of the anthracite combination, is owned jointly by the Reading, Jersey Central, Lehigh, Lackawanna, Erie and New York, Susquehanna & Western railroads. Each stockholding road names a director. These get together and decide the policy of the Temple Iron Company as to prices, production, etc. They decide theoretically for that company only, but the Government charges that in fact the decisions reached at these conferences bind all the stockholding railroad and anthracite companies, and thus there is a perfect combination.

The court holds that the Temple Iron Company is a combination violative of the Sherman law, and orders it dissolved. That is the essential thing in the Government's case. There seems to have been some misunderstanding of the decision, and reports have gone out that in the main it was a government defeat. So far as may be judged from information at hand, it is altogether the contrary.

Applies to Beef Trust as Well.

"The Temple Iron Company, which is declared an illegal conspiracy, stands in exactly the same relation to the anthracite trust that the National Packing Company occupies to the Meat Trust.

"In one case the railroads which control coal are joint owners of the Temple Iron Company, and make all plans for control of the business through its board of directors. In the other case the big packing concerns which control the meat business are the owners of the stock of the National Packing Company. They are represented in its board and when they meet around its directors' table they make plans for its policy, fix prices, etc., for that one company; but when they have agreed, each goes out and enforces these prices and conditions in the management of his own company.

"The parallel is complete. The Government has won in the Temple Iron case, and it will win in the packers case. The victory in the Temple Iron case, if sustained by the Supreme Court, will be the precedent which will compel the dissolution of the National Packing Company, and at the same time the dissolution of the packers' combine."

Early Decision Expected.

That an early decision will be had from the Supreme Court on the appeal was also predicted at the Department of Justice. Under a rule of the court the case is entitled to special hearing, and it is the intention of Atorney-General Wickersham to advance it to a final judgment as speedily as possible.

James C. McReynolds, who urged the case for the Government as special counsel, had a long conference with the Attorney General yesterday, and at its close the following statement was issued at the Department of Justice upon the case:

"As soon as judgment is entered, the Government will appeal to the Supreme Court from so much of it as is in favor of the defendants. The case will be entitled to priority in the Supreme Court, and it is hoped that it may be advanced and heard at a reasonably early date. The department is, of course, gratified with the results, so far as it is favorable to the Government."

AIRSHIPS FOR ARMY URGED BY WILSON

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—Secretary of War Dickinson, in his annual report, indorses the flying machine and recommends to Congress an appropriation to provide the signal corps with a reasonable number of the better type of machine for instruction purposes and field work. The Secretary calls attention to the fact that the entrance to Chesapeake Bay, one of the most important points strategically on the Atlantic sea coast, is wholly unfortified. At another important point—the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound—additional guns are needed. The total estimates for military purposes for the next year aggregate $139,674,278, which is $3,257,901 less than the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

Black, a bookkeeper, so as to give the mother custody of her son, Freeman. This is the first case in which woman jurors have sat in this city.

KITTY GORDON ASKS DIVORCE

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—Kitty Gordon, the beautiful English actress, who until a few days ago was the star of "Alma" at Joe Weber's Theatre, and who in private life is the Hon. Mrs. Henry Beresford, is going to detach herself from the latter distinction, she says.

She expects to accomplish the detachment via the British divorce courts.

"I've had my solicitor bring suit against the Hon. Mr. Beresford," Miss Gordon announced in her suit at the St. Francis Hotel.

"Why?" was asked.

"My word!" replied the actress. "Why do women generally divorce their husbands?"

"Another woman?"

"Another one—and then another and still another. Three!"

Miss Gordon added that the three were "London ladies," but she had spared their feelings to the extent of not giving their names in the sworn statements she made and forwarded, together with the testimony of other witnesses, to her solicitor, William Merrick, of London.

"I've been going to divorce the Hon. Mr. Beresford for two years or so," she explained, "but he always made things up with me, and I gave him another chance each time. But now I'm going to carry it through. I was informed that Mr. Merrick would serve the necessary papers in London this week."

Society in London will probably be stirred up some over the suit, for the Hon. Hery Beresford is a cousin of Lord Charles Beresford and the brother of another peer, Lord Decies, to whose title he may some day succeed.

Miss Gordon said her recent retirement from "Alma" was solely because she wanted a rest, and that her approaching divorce suit had nothing to do with it.

BROCKTON WOMAN SEEKS LOST SON

Mrs. H. E. Hildreth of No. 148 Mulberry street, Brockton, has appealed for help in her search for her fourteen-year-old son, George Hildreth, who disappeared October 31, because he was afraid that he would be arrested for accidentally breaking a store window that night while playing with his boy friends. The boy's mother has communicated with all her relatives and the boy's friends, but the whereabouts of her son is still a complete mystery to her. The boy was a pupil of the Winthrop Grammar School in Brockton. When he left home on October 31 he wore brown knickerbocker pants, black low-cut shoes and a cap. He is dark-complected and is rather tall for his age.

ICE MEN PREDICT CROP SHORTAGE

AMESBURY, Dec. 9.—Because of the Autumn drought which has dried up the springs that feed the ponds in north-eastern Massachusetts, ice cutters say that the outlook for this season's ice crop is the most alarming it has been for years. Unless there are heavy snowfalls, followed by a long January thaw, there will be practically no ice to cut, they say. Most of the ponds are frozen, it is said, but the ice is less than a foot thick and frozen to the bottoms. Lake Gardner is the only pond not seriously affected, according to the ice men.

KITTY GORDON, TO DIVORCE HON. MR. BERESFORD

INDORSE PLANS OF MRS. EDDY

The written instructions and directions of Mrs. Eddy will continue to guide the destinies of the Christian Science Church. The Board of Directors decided this at its first meeting. There is a spirit of harmony prevailing among the five leaders of the society, and it is their verdict that the policies outlined by the founder of the movement will be carried out.

Stephen A. Chase, Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittemore and Adam H. Dickey, the Board of Directors, formally announce themselves as controlling the church, both from a business and spiritual standpoint. Telegrams from all parts of the country spell the unswerving loyalty and support of the entire denomination.

'BARBER' SUNG FOR THIRD TIME

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

"The Barber of Seville" was sung for the third time this season before a large audience at the Boston Opera last night.

It was the farewell appearance of Leon Sibiriakoff, the giant bass, who goes back to Russia in a few days. Sibiriakoff sang Don Basilio; Constantino, Count Almaviva; and Lipkowska, Rosina.

Sibiriakoff was engaged for ten appearances and has made them all. He came here with a reputation as a wonderful "Mefistofele" and he certainly was all that could be desired in that role, but he didn't know much of anything else. He could pass Basilio in "The Barber" and "Mefistofele" in Faust, if they would allow him to sing in Russian, but there his effective repertory ended, so he is going away from here.

In Mardones, the Boston company has a splendid bass, who is capable of singing all Sibiriakoff's roles acceptably, and Didur, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be heard here frequently.

The charm of Lipkowska's Rosina, the brilliant singing of Constantino, and the glibness of Fornari's Barber, have been mentioned in previous notices of this opera, and it is time that Tavecchia, the buffo, got a little attention.

Here is a man with a pleasing bass voice who doesn't have to fake high notes or low ones, and whose characters are well conceived and thoroughly artistic. The average opera buffo is a clown. He will do anything for a laugh, he is about as dramatic as a comedian in a burlesque show. Tavecchia's acting is excellent. Last night, for example, his imitation of a fussy old man dropping off to sleep, and later of being paralyzed in the middle of a sneeze by an unexpected crash, were comical and lifelike. And his whole idea of the fussy old guardian, suspicious and credulous, a farce was that of a finished actor.

Constantino's comedy is more in the nature of clowning, but it gets the laugh, and his singing is so satisfying.

Special Notice.

MAKES FRIENDS.

There is no way of making lasting friends like "Making Good"; and Dr. Pierce's medicines well exemplify this, and their friends, after more than four decades of popularity, are numbered by the hundreds of thousands. They have "made good." For a torpid liver with its attendant indigestion, dyspepsia, headache, perhaps dizziness, foul breath, nasty coated tongue, with bitter taste, loss of appetite, with distress after eating, nervousness and debility, nothing is as good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you have a strong stomach and a strong body.

BIG MONEY BARREL TO BUILD UP DOVES

By SID WHIPPLE.

Now that William Hepburn Russell is known as the real owner of the Boston National Baseball Club, the question arises, "Just what will he do with his new possession?"

Will he allow it to suffer for lack of money, or will he place it on its feet again? Is he a man capable of running a proposition like this in the way it ought to be managed, or will he prove to be what the Dove managers have been in the past—so tied up in other interests and other affairs that he will be unable to devote his time to the proper management of the club?

There is but one answer to all this: Mr. Russell has bought the club as a financial investment. He is, therefore, willing to spend money. He is capable of running the club, and will do so. He is willing to spend all the time necessary for this purpose.

Critics "In Wrong."

When the fact was announced exclusively in the BOSTON AMERICAN last Sunday that the club had been sold, when James Phelan admitted that he had helped make the deal, even when convincing proof was offered that the transaction was a certainty, and when the details of the sale were made public, there were those, and among them several sporting writers, who refused to read between the lines and refused to believe their own eyes and ears.

The price set for the property, $100,000, is deemed just "about right" by those who know the game. The terms under which the property will be transferred are not considered strange. Mr. Harris controlled 76 per cent of the stock just previous to the time the transaction was made. For this stock he was offered by Mr. Russell or Mr. Russell's agents $76,000, basing the club's valuation at $100,000. This offer was turned down once, but later accepted under certain conditions.

It was these conditions that caused all the mystification of those who were in the dark as to what had been done. Mr. Harris had his own ideas about the sale of the club, and for personal reasons desired the actual control of the club's affairs until the annual meeting. He was equally anxious to dispose of the team to Mr. Russell, but would do so only under conditions of secrecy which were imposed.

The deal was practically closed by the actual payment of $25,000 by Mr. Phelan and Mr. Russell, which left Mr. Harris still the majority stockholder, with 51 per cent of the stock in his possession. By the payment of $51,000 this will be transferred to the men who now hold the option on the stock.

Harris Statements True.

Mr. Harris was exactly correct when he said the club was still in his hands. He was correct when he stated that the status of the company had undergone no change since he came to Boston. He was right when he said as he left the city that there was no deal pending. The deal had already been made, and no other was pending at the time.

Mr. Harris had his program to carry out and certain interests which he was bound to look after. This caused all the secrecy under which the deal was transacted.

Ever since the first announcement that the club had been sold was printed, many people have been attempting to prove that the deal was made through the influence and at the instigation of certain men in the American League. That nothing was ever farther than this from the real truth is proved by the fact that Mr. Russell, the chief owner, and the men who will be associated with him in the interest, are all National League sympathizers, and men who have absolutely no interest in any other league club.

A movement to change the club into moneyed hands and thereby bring a good team to Boston, would certainly not meet with the condition of support from the American League management. Any increased support of the Nationals would certainly detract to some extent from that accorded the American League, and they knew it. Such a story hasn't a leg to stand on when the men in the deal are known and after the affair is worked out logically.

For a moment I was puzzled when Mr. Harris made certain statements at the Boston meeting. But in Tuesday morning's BOSTON AMERICAN I said that Mr. Harris was without a doubt putting a strict interpretation on the word "sold," when he said that the club had not been sold. This statement proved correct and the only logical conclusion it was possible to draw from the whole thing.

They are experts at one-hand dribbling and last year were prominent in the splendid offence the champion South Boston five offered. BAY STATE LEAGUE TO REVISE DATES

The Bay State Basketball League will hold a meeting to-morrow at the United States Hotel, when a new schedule will be arranged, owing to the disbandment of the Charlestown team. President Edmund J. By E. V. B. PARKE.

The Harvard hockey seven plays the first game of the season to-night in the Boston Arena at 8:15 o'clock with the team of the Boston Hockey Club. As both of the sevens are at present playing a fast article of the ice sport, a good game should result.

The contest should be especially interesting as practically all of the players of the Boston Hockey team are former Harvard stars. Although the Harvard seven has been practicing more than its opponents, yet it will have a hard go owing to the calibre of the players on the former team.

The first game of the regular collegiate series on the Harvard schedule comes next Saturday evening with Technology, but it is likely that extra games such as the one to-night will be thrown in the schedule at intervals, giving the Crimson an excellent chance to round into shape at a much earlier period this year than formerly.

The presence of Hicks, last year's captain of Harvard, Townsend, captain three years ago, and Winsor, at present coach of the Harvard seven, should make the game hard fought and sharp.

The Boston Hockey Club recently defeated Technology and it is more than likely that they will emerge the winner to-night, as they are all veterans and men who know the game from A to Z.

BROOKLINE CREW TO GET TITLE BANNER

It has been decided to award a banner to Brookline High School, which won the crew championship of the Boston Interscholastic Rowing Association last Spring. Each member of the crew will be given a trophy, and the championship cup, which must be won three years, will be held for a year. The banner indicates the win for 1910.

HOCKEY TEAM NOTES

Stone School will have its first hockey team since the days of Thurner and Cutler. They are a member of the Interpreparatory League this season, and expect to make a good showing.

Brown and Nichols were never before represented in league hockey, but this season they will play in the Interscholastic League.

Melrose High has arranged the longest schoolboy hockey schedule, leading the list with twenty-seven games. Medford is second, with twenty-six games, and Somerville has arranged twenty-five games.

Melrose High starts its season with Wellesley High at home on December 16, and then plays about every two or three days.

Milton High has but four games to be played away from home, and one of them will be played at the Arena.

This is the fourth year for the Interpreparatory League. Milton High has two legs on the cup, and Medford High has one leg of the cup. Milton has a strong team this season, and they expect to take the odd leg.

Nearly all of the school teams have one or more games to be played at the Boston Arena.

The Somerville High school athletic management has decided to abolish basketball at the school this year and pay a little more attention to ice hockey. Carl Holmes, manager of the team, looks for a good season.

Earl Dickson, a veteran forward, has been elected to lead the Somerville High seven for the coming season. Dickson is popular with the followers of the ice hockey sport and should make good.

The Roxbury Neighborhood first and second teams have reorganized for the season and would like to arrange games with 110-125-pound teams. Half expenses given or taken. Would like to book a game with the Manhattan A. C. of the West End. Harry Brinstien, No. 60 Fellows street, Roxbury.

Bob Garland, who made a name for himself as a handler of the pigskin, will play overpoint position on the Somerville High seven, with Captain Dickson, Donahue, Whittaker and Laurie, forwards; Hamilton, point, and Baker, goal. The above men are the most probable candidates, although they may lost their positions, as twenty-five candidates reported for practice, and all look good.

The schedule of the Somerville High seven calls for twenty-five games, most of which will be played at the Boston Arena. Five of these games will be Interscholastic League games.

PRELATE AT ROME A BASEBALL FAN

ROME, Dec. 10—Connie Mack, of the Athletics, who is in Italy on his honeymoon, was granted an audience with the Pope and the American College. He also gave the students at the college an account of how the Philadelphia Americans won the world's title.

In the middle of his talk a grave prelate in flowing robes broke in with, "O, Mr. Mack, why didn't you place Plank in as pitcher?"

"Because," Mack replied, "Plank is a left-hander, and I felt that the Chicago team would hit the left-hand pitchers."

"The question," said Mack, in commenting on the affair, "showed such local knowledge from an onlooker 3,000 miles away that I felt American baseball had penetrated into Rome, at least among my countrymen here."

"WHITE MAN'S HOPE" BLOOMS EVERYWHERE

By ED W. SMITH.

O you white man's hope!

He is sprouting out in every corner of the globe.

American soil is a particularly fertile source for their growth and development.

Almost every veteran fighter in the country has one of them. Those that haven't are preparing to at the first opportunity.

Four or five of them are prominently before the public right now. Others are coming up. Only the other day the startling announcement was made that the prevailing fashion had germed itself upon Jack Johnson, the target of all the "hopes," and he had proceeded to gather one for himself.

Tommy Ryan, former middleweight champion, has one; so has Joe Choynski; Jim Corbett has several of them in view; several others are self-supported and unattached at the present time. O, yes, it's just lovely the way the new fighters with an ambition to lambast the everlasting daylights out of the man of shade are springing up all over.

'Hopes' Almost All Giants.

All of them are giants—too big, in fact, in most cases.

Ryan's man is Con O'Kelly, a real Irishman—not one of the transplanted or hothouse variety, but one just after stepping off the old sod. Con is a giant as far as height is concerned, but he is of trim build.

Cornelius came to this country as a wrestler, without a thought of breaking into the fighting game. He was Olympian champion, having trimmed all other nations during the great amateur carnival in Lonodn two years ago.

He was big enough, but when he landed here and took on some of the real good ones it was discovered in a hurry that he was a long way from being good enough.

He happened to run into Jeffries during the latter's tour of the country. He amused Jeff, for he is a regular comedian, and Jeff kidded him into believing he might make a fighter, even offering to take him West and make him a member of his training camp.

McLeod Choynski's Man.

Choynski's man is Miles McLeod, a big Missouri farmer. Joe got in touch with him through a brother who lives in Chicago, went down there to look him over, was duly impressed and now has him in a vaudeville sketch with him.

Joe says he believes the young man will make good. He has yet to be tested, but before he is Joe intends to drum into him a whole lot of ideas on the fighting game. Then he will be ready for the fire.

Johnson's man is Walter Monahan, a young Irishman from the Pacific Coast. Jack picked him up out there while he was training near the Cliff House, took a strong fancy to him, and after the Reno affair brought him on to Chicago with him. Later Monahan was offered the position of sparring partner to the champion and accepted it gladly.

Monahan Making Good.

Jack says the young fellow is making good and will improve with great strides. He likes him because Monahan likes the game and is willing to learn, something that Johnson cannot say about the other men that he has tried as partners.

In the table of measurements printed herewith of these men a good comparison with the present champion will be found.

HOW THE NEW "HOPES" COMPARE WITH JOHNSON

	Johnson	O'Kelly	McLeod	Monahan
Age (years)	32	23	26	21
Weight (lbs.)	205	220	225	204
Height	6-1	6-4	6-5	5-11¾
Reach (in.)	72	79	82	71
Chest, ex. (in.)	43½	50	45	45
Chest, nor. (in.)	40	45¾	41	41
Waist (in.)	[illegible]	33	39	37
Biceps (in.)	16	16½	16	16
Forearm (in.)	13	14	13	12¾
Wrist (in.)	7½	8¾	8	7¾
Thigh (in.)	22½	25¾	23	22
Calf (in.)	15	16¼	16	15
Ankle (in.)	10¾	9½	10¾	9½
Neck (in.)	17	18½	16	17

McLeod and O'Kelly overtop the others in the matter of sheer bulk, with O'Kelly perhaps the trimmer of the two. Monahan is the smallest of the lot, but as Johnson says, is plenty big enough, as he himself won the championship at 200 pounds at Reno. Monahan in strict training probably would be brought down to 195 pounds.

BOXERS TO DECIDE "MACARONI" TITLE

The all-star show at the Armory Club, Tuesday next, gives promise of more real boxing than any show programmed for some time. There will be five bouts in all, three at six rounds each, and two slated for ten rounds each. The Pantz-Meringo match is to settle the "Macaroni" championship, both lads being Italian. There will be action every moment when Kid Murphy of Lawrence and Young McGovern of Woburn don the gloves. Jack Leonard of Philadelphia, is well recommended, and he needs to be good to beat Tommy Furey.

Two lads of French descent, Frank Perron and Morris Lemoyne, will struggle in a ten round contest; while the final between Benny Kauffman of Philadelphia and Al Delmont, the local favorite, should prove a fitting wind-up to one of the best balanced shows ever seen in this city.

ADD 3 ROUNDS TO MANCHESTER BOUT

Manager Malmburg of the Queen City A. C. of Manchester has added three rounds to the distance for Bartley Connolly of Portland and Tom Sawyer of Rockland. It was the intention of the directors to cut the matches in the future from fifteen rounds to twelve, but on account of the members being accustomed to the old route the men will battle for fifteen rounds December 16. The manager notified the representatives of the men and they have agreed to the condition. Young Labore No. 2 will be given a chance at this meeting and Young Russell of Derry will also show in one of the bouts.

SENIORS WIN GIRLS' BASKETBALL GAME

The first of a series of interclass basketball games for the championship of Woodward Institute for girls at Quincy was won by the seniors, 17 to 12. A large silver cup has been donated by the school, and will be given to the team winning the championship.

Miss Ruth Ekstranch and Miss Frances Curtain scored all the points for the winning team, the latter making 13 of them. Miss Edith Mullen and Miss Rachel Hardwick blocked and passed cleverly for the winning team, while the Misses Clark, Dasha and Crowcher carried off the honors for the Juniors.

JACK TWIN AFTER FLYNN OR MORRIS

Jack Twin Sullivan, who knocked out Jim Stewart in New York, wants to meet the winner of the Porky Flynn-Andy Morris bout, which is to be decided at the Colonial Club in Fall River next Wednesday night.

Twin is training at the Riverside Boat Club for several matches that he has in view. The West Side A. C. has made him an offer to meet the winner of the Barry-Ross match, which is to be decided in the Southern city December 18. Twin would prefer to stay at home, however, for the holidays and take on the winner of the Fall River show.

FINE NEW TRACK FOR AUGUSTA RACES

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Dec. 10.—A modern race track will be built at Augusta, Ga. This became known to-day when a delegation from the Augusta Chamber of Commerce visited several of the leading racing men here and outlined their plans. Charles Odell, the millionaire broker of Savannah is said to be interested in the scheme.

BIG BOWLING MATCHES MADE

By ED. COGSWELL.

In the past twenty-four hours matters have been on the hustle in bowling circles about town in arranging matches for the near future, and each one looks to be classy enough to keep the "bugs" right on edge.

The most important professional encounter was fixed between Poehler's Pets and Symonds' Specials for $150 to take place on December 20 and 27, the opening match to be at Symonds' Alleys in Lynn, and the following Tuesday the final meeting to be at the Hayward Alleys in this city.

The decision will be on the point system, four points in each match, the team winning the odd one the winners, of course. Poehler's Pets comprise of Brown, Walsh, Marrell, Taylor and Poehler, while the Lynn representatives are expected to be Cole, Burdett, Rounds, Lucia and Williamson.

It will be remembered that quite recently Poehler's Pets made the highest score ever made by five men, 1,631, and there has been some scurrying around to find a team capable of giving them a licking.

Next Thursday evening at the Boylston Alleys five of the best candlepin bowlers in Greater Boston will oppose the pick of Boston pin experts from the leading clubs.

In the candlepin aggregation will be seen Armstrong, Warren Brown, Walsh, Poehler and Goodnow, called the Goodnow Pets. For the Boston pins is Atkins, Fuller, Dr. Britt, Hallas and Chandler. It is expected that the Boylston Alleys will not be roomy enough to accomodate the spectators who wish to see the sport.

On Friday evening comes the return match with Hintze's Specials and the Gloucesters at the Hayward Alleys. On the trip to fish town the Boston boys were trimmed to the King's taste and are now looking for sweet revenge.

BOWLING ALLEY NEWS

The boys had a splendid time at Marget's Aleys, Manager Walter R. Kirk setting up a good dinner, with the necessary outside fixin's. To initiate the aleys, Kirk bowled a three-string total of 401, and is now waiting for some crack to beat the figures.

Well, the Shawmut team in the Furniture League turned the trick again, taking four straight from Brooks. Carroll's lads seem to be a class by themselves this season. Dave Horan, the "Mayo Gout," claimed a lame back from laying too many carpets the past week, hence his slump. He has challenged Riley and Piotti, giving them 10 pins a string. Here's luck to the "tack driver."

Amongst the bowlers who hit the pins at a terrible clip in their last matches in the Church League were the following men: Bradbury, R. Heald, Pyatt, Hinger, Watson, F. Henderson, and Publecover.

Pilgrim, in the Church League, after having a poor start, rolling only 419, came back with a dandy string, 515 and 484.

What was the matter with our friend Champion in the Manchester Unity League?

John Carter Co. have not lost a single game yet in the Paper League. Carter Rice are just one game behind.

There was a lot of excitement at the Boston Alleys when Captain Edwards' Team of the Federal Leafue trimmed the team headed by Captain Simpson. Edwards was elated, though he claimed he was not feeling well when he started.

Brandes, in the Federal League, has just started to bump the pins. He has been a little off color, but now that he has struck his stride, great things are to be expected in the future.

Who's Who IN BASKETBALL

FRANK W. JOHNSON—No. 1.

FRANK W JOHNSON

Frank W. Johnson, manager and captain of the Boylston Five, is well known to all amateurs and semi-professional baseball and basketball players throughout the State. Has played with and captained the Boylston Five since 1904; also captain and manager of the Fenno Five.

In baseball he was captain and manager from 1897 to 1906 when the team disbanded. He then started a suburban league in 1907. Managed the Mattapan team in that league. In 1908 played with the William Read team and in 1909 and 1910 captained and managed the well-known Roger Wolcotts. Is an old Boston Latin player and in 1903 and 1904 was pitcher and played third base for the school team.

BOSTON ENGLISH BOY ATHLETIC DIRECTOR

J. E. Halligan, an old Boston English High school boy, class of '99, has been elected director of all athletics at the University of Louisiana. Halligan has been in the South for several seasons, and during this year was regarded as one of the most competent football officials in the southern district. Although having charge of all athletics, Halligan intends retaining Johnny Mayhew, the former Brown star, as football coach. Louisiana's season this year was not a huge success, but Halligan feels that Mayhew was in no way responsible.

FIVE BOUTS ON CARD AT HYDE PARK A. C.

The following card is announced for the meeting of the Hyde Park Athletic Club next Monday night: Young Yenger vs. Kid Lippe and Bennie Burke of the North End vs. Johnny Murphy of South Boston, six rounds each, and two other bouts of six rounds each between local boys. The main bout of eight rounds will bring together Young Jasper of the North End and Martin Baldus of East Boston. Application for membership can be obtained from Al Delmont, assistant secretary, No. 8 Dover street, Boston.

FOOTBALL CAPTAINCY STILL IN DEADLOCK

PITTSFIELD, Dec. 10.—The fourteen players of the Pittsfield High School eleven eligible to vote for a captain for next season's school eleven met again, but with no better success than when they gathered before to elect a captain. The two candidates in the field each received seven votes, and after several ballots the meeting adjourned.

BIG TRACK SQUAD AT ENGLISH HIGH

Sixty candidates have reported for the English High track team. Coach Crowley and Captain "Bill" Meanix announced that a few weeks of light work would be started next week. After the Christmas holidays training will be held daily at the B. A. A. outdoor board track, Irvington street.

JOHNNY MOONEY BACKS NEW CLUB

A sensation was caused in local boxing circles to-day when it became known that a deal was on whereby Johnny McGann and Johnny Mooney were to hire the hall of the St. Alphonsus Athletic Association for one night in the week during the Winter season, and would put on first-class boxing entertainments.

McGann and Mooney are two of the best known promoters in New England, and the affair is sure to be a success under their management.

As at present outlined it is the intention to hold star bouts every Monday evening, and as soon as the deal is closed some rousing good bouts are sure to be seen in Roxbury.

SOCCER GAMES TO-DAY.

Boston and District League—Beverly vs. Brockton at Beverly, Boston Americans vs. McGregors at Quincy, Lynn City vs. Boston Rovers at Lynnhurst, Charlestown vs. Fore River at Charlestown, Lynn Fosse vs. Boston Rangers at Lynn.

BOXING NEWS AND NOTES

The Chicopee sports have canned Jack Williams, the second who lost Pelky the bout the other night.

Dummy Decker and Johnny Doban meet at Baltimore New Year's Day.

Guess there will be some warm work at that all star show at the Armory Club next Tuesday.

There is a prize offered to anyone who can tell anything about Kid Solzberg. Looks like a new wonder unearthed.

Jimmy Walsh will tackle tough game away from this city. Here his manager wants him to box Patsy Brannigan or Alf Lynch.

Fireman Jim Flynn will do better to stay in California. Last time that he was here he wanted the State House to box some second rater.

The bout at New Orleans between Jim Barry and Tony Ross will take place on Sunday, December 18.

It would be a wise move for the St. Alphonsus directors to place a padding under their ring.

A new club has been organized to take charge of athletics in Cambridge, and boxing is to be featured.

If someone does not give Dan Hurley of Charlestown a fight soon, he threatens to quit the game and go to work.

All persons are saying that the program at the Armory Club Tuesday, looks like the best staged this Winter.

BOSTON BOXER EASY WINNER

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 10.—Before a crowd that packed Nonpareil Hall to its utmost, Eddie Murphy of Boston defeated Charlie (Twin) Miller, recently of Boston, but now of this city, in the feature bout.

Young Erne, the Grays Ferry lightweight, was to have met Murphy, but at the last moment his manager telephoned that it would be impossible for Erne to keep the date, as he was suffering from a sprained ankle. This was a big disappointment to the large crowd present.

Miller proved no match for the sturdy Boston lad, who won easily. Murphy had a combination of left hooks, left jabs and right uppercuts, which worked to perfection. All of the rounds belonged to him, and he had Miller holding on several times to avoid punishment. Murphy also used a left jab to good effect.

In the last round Murphy dropped Miller with a right straight to the jaw, but Miller was up in a jiffy and boxed cautiously to the end.

If Santa Claus Were Poor

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

WHEN kids get sick along our street, sometimes rich ladies call
An' tell the mothers they had ought to not have kids at all,
Because they let 'em go to school in ragged shoes an' clo's
An' get 'emselves all wet an' chilled the days it rains or snows.
They say the mothers ought to learn a book they call hygeen
Because a kid could not get sick if he was just kept clean.

AN' then sometimes poor ladies come, an' bring in milk an' meat,
An' do the housework so's to give the mothers time to eat.
Or sit beside the kids that's sick, an hum a little song
An' never tell the mothers that they're doin' things all wrong.
An' when they go they always takes us well ones home for meals,
For when a lady's poor she knows just how a mother feels.

WHEN dad ain't got no job, sometimes a gentleman is sent
To see him, from a fine big house they call a Settlement.
He tells the old man all about the big mistake he made
In carryin' the hod instead o' learning some good trade.
He says that speshalty's the thing, and when a man don't know
To do one thing an' do it well, he'll never stand no show.

AN' then a poor man in our street he comes around at night
An' says that luck is pretty hard, but it'll change all right.
He'll ask around among his friends who need good men like dad
An' tip him off just where to get the best job to be had.
An' then he takes a dollar out, an' stutters, an' says "When You've got good steady work, old man, why pay it back again."

I GUESS this fellow Santa Claus was always well ter do
An' never thinks of kids like us at Christmas time, don't you?
For only people that is poor, like them along our street,
Can know that when you're hungry all you want to do is eat.
An' us kids needs a Chris'mas, an' we'd get one, I am sure,
Just like the rich kids always does—if Santa Claus was poor.

The Pretenders

A FAMILY, consisting of a mother and two daughters, sojourning at a Winter resort hotel, furnished the other guests a continuous performance of lofty airs and exclusive manners.

Good-looking women, with an extensive wardrobe, a motor car and a chauffeur, they seemed to feel that the entire hotel was their private house; that the attendants were their private servants, and that all other guests were interlopers, or mere insects buzzing in the sunshine.

To some of the guests the attitude of this family (from an interior American town) was merely amusing; to others it was aggravating, and to a few it was awe inspiring.

The few [illegible] people with small knowledge of the world or of humanity fawned about the three women and seemed to feel elated and uplifted if they received a gracious word or look.

To ride in their motor car was an event.

Nobodies at Home

Something less than a year later one of the guests at the hotel chanced to be in the interior American city where the "haughty ladies" resided. Making a casual inquiry regarding their social status, interesting facts developed.

The family which had believed itself the leading social power in the distant hotel resort at home was not recognized at all.

The mother and her two daughters were "nobodies."

They held no place and wielded no influence where they were known.

It is safe to conjecture that such conditions exist whenever a man or woman assumes a manner of great superiority toward strangers.

Real Worth Is Modest

The people of real worth, real character and real power are invariably modest and unassuming.

They are not afraid to make passing acquaintances or to be genial and gracious, because they know the social usages of the world and understand that acquaintance does not of necessity develop into intimate friendship.

Confident of their own position at home, they make no effort to impress others with their exclusiveness.

In kingdoms and monarchies we expect to find class distinctions, but no kingdom and no monarchy can show so many class distinctions as are made in our democratic America.

NO classes here! Why, that is idle talk.
The village beau sneers at the country boor;
The importuning mendicants who walk
Our city streets despise the parish poor.

The daily toiler at some noisy loom
Holds back her garments from the kitchen maid.
Meanwhile the latter leans upon her broom,
Unconscious of the [illegible] the laundress made.

The grocer's daughter eyes the farmer's lass
With haughty glances; and the lawyer's wife
Would pay no visit to the trading class
If policy were not her creed in life.

The merchant's son nods coldly at the clerk;
The proud possessor of a pedigree
Ignores the youth whose father rose by work;
The title-seeking maiden scorns all three.

The aristocracy of blood looks down
Upon the "nouveau riche"; and, in disdain,
The lords of the intellectual frown
On both, and worship at the shrine of brain.

"No classes here," the clergyman has said;
"We are one family." Yet see his rage
And horror when his favorite son would wed
Some pure and pretty player on the stage.

It is the vain but natural human way
Of vaunting our weak selves, our pride our worth!
Not till the long-delayed millennial day
Shall we behold "no classes" on God's earth.

The Coronation

By Nell Brinkley

Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal-Examiner

And the one chosen to crown Love was the Homemaker and Mother, with whom Love was service.

ONCE upon a day when the world was young, the good folk who inhabited it were concerned greatly with the business of choosing a king. Several kings had they raised up to rule over them from time to time, but none of the kings so raised up gave satisfaction to the folk of the wide country called the world and they were deposed. And then names of the kings raised up to rule over the folk were Prudence and Vanity and Common Sense and Friendship and Gold and Fear, and many others. And the last of this long line of kings had been deposed and a new king, the little God of Love, had been chosen to rule for all time, because he suited all the folk of the country called the world.

And the day came for the crowning of the new king—the great coronation—and the womenkind of the folk who lived in the country called the world took this pleasure unto themselves.

And each one of them wanted the honor of crowning the new king, Love, claiming a special fitness for it because of some service they had done in the cause of Love. And the stenographers and the society ladies and others who esteemed themselves the gentlefolk of the country debated the question, each putting forward her claims.

When the debate was at its height, and when the hour for the coronation had come, the one who was to crown Love had not been chosen. The assembled claimants decided to let Love himself choose the one who should place the crown of the country called the world upon his head.

As Love was about to make his choice there entered into the throne room a woman, plain-seeming enough, but to Love's experienced eyes, beautiful, and without hesitation Love chose her, because she had given most in his cause, for she was a homemaker and a mother, and with her love was service and service was love. She had been delayed at home by the cries of little kiddies, and her surprise was great when she became the central figure in the great coronation, when she expected to be only a spectator.

And so Love was crowned king of the great, wide country called the world, and long will he reign supreme and the rule of his reign will be service for the loved one, both from the womenfolk and the menfolk of the country called the world.

The Too Ingenuous Ingenue

By DOROTHY DIX

ACCORDING to the newspaper despatches, a rich young girl in Chicago has been so carefully secluded from the world and protected from men that she has never in all her life even been out on the street without a chaperon, or held a conversation with any man except her father.

This young woman is to be taken out of her satin-lined Adamless Eden prison and introduced into society this Winter, and here's betting dollars to doughnuts that she goes man-crazy and is a very fool of love. Her parents will be lucky if she doesn't make eyes at the ashman and elope with the chauffeur.

When one sees the fly and flip little girls all about us—premature little women—who are indulging in flirtations with callow hobbledehoys at an age when they should be playing with their dolls, one understands the disgust which made a mother feel that she wanted to keep her own daughter unspotted from the world. Nor can one wonder that the only way that the mother saw to achieve this end was to follow the foreign fashion, which keeps a girl hermetically sealed up in a sardine tin, as it were, until she is grown.

She Becomes Indiscreet

This method appears to work out well enough with French girls, who like canary birds, have been bred in cages so long that they probably don't mind it, but it doesn't succeed with the American girl. She is made of sterner stuff. She is a fledgling of the eagle, and when you imprison her something is mighty apt to break. Furthermore, when she does get the liberty for which she has been striving and breaking her heart, she goes mad with it, so that there is no restraining her.

There is no other way that is so sure to make a girl indiscreet as to overchaperon her. Stolen waters are proverbially sweet, and there is not a girl living with a grain of spirit or love of fun in her that would not find an unholy joy in outwitting the duenna who is spying upon her. This accounts for the reckless pranks of boarding school girls and explains why such girls often get involved in vulgar scandals, that would be repulsive to them, themselves, under other conditions. They make eyes at the postman, if he is good looking; they wave to strange men on the street, they write compromising letters to unknown correspondents, simply and solely because it is forbidden.

All of us want to keep our little ewe lambs as white as snow, but, as a matter of fact, we can't do it by watching them. That job has to be attended to by the little lambkin herself, and the best that we can do is not to keep her in ignorance of the fact that there are puddles and mud that will stain her fleece, but to point out the puddles and the mud to her and to teach her how to skip nimbly and neatly by the mire without getting any stains upon her, or so much as soiling the soles of her feet.

Her Best Chaperon

The best chaperon that any girl can have is a good working knowledge of life, and high moral principles, and an exalted sense of honor. These are not learned in a boarding school, nor are they acquired under the watchful eyes of a governess. Only a mother can instill them into the breast of her daughter, and if, she does this, line upon line, and precept upon precept, and example upon example, from the hour that she first begins unfolding the story of life to the little girl at her knee, she won't need to worry about playing sheep dog to that daughter when she is grown.

That girl will know how to conduct herself with dignity and propriety anywhere on earth. She will be thrice armored in her own virtue, and a whole regiment of chaperons, with a hundred eyes each, could not protect her as well as she can protect herself. She is ten million times safer than the flabby souled little ingenue who has been kept ignorant of the world, and who relies for protection on somebody watching her and keeping her out of trouble.

Furthermore, any woman who thinks that she is safeguarding her daughter from love entanglements by keeping her from all association with men needs to have her own head operated on for the sillies. There is no other things on earth to which distance lends so much enchantment as it does to a man. Any sort of a creature in trousers becomes a hero, a demi-god, if he is far enough off for you not to be able to get a good line on his weaknesses and failures.

No Masculine Halo

There are no girls so idiotically romantic and sentimental as those who are brought up in strictly feminine households, and who grow up looking upon man as a fearsome and awesome being. Such a girl is dead sure to fall in love with the very first man who looks at her, and to marry anybody that asks her.

On the other hand the girl who has had no mystery made of the opposite sex, sees men without any halo surrounding the masculine brow. Not every man to her is a figure of romance. She doesn't dress every dry goods clerk up in her imagination in the jeweled cap of a Romeo, or see a Sir Percival in every anemic young curate.

She has known men all of her life, and had most of the illusions about them knocked into a cocked hat. She has taken the measure of their strength and weakness, their vanities and foibles, their good qualities and their bad, and while this does not keep her from falling in love with some particular man, it does prevent her from being one of those silly females who are man worshippers and always chasing men down.

The moral of all of which is that if you want to make a girl put an overvaluation on men, shut her up where she never sees one. If you want to make her crazy for admiration of men, don't let her have any masculine society. If you want to make her ready to climb out of the window and go off with any unprincipled rascal who happens to have big dreamy eyes and a black mustache, just cut out romance from her life and keep her under the watchful eye of a chaperon until she is twenty.

Boy and girl sweethearting may be silly enough, but calf love is like having the measles early in life. It protects you against having a fatal case later on.

Jolly Christmas Games

FOR the many jolly gatherings of Christmas week a game or two may be in order. Here are some that will help the young folks have a good time, if a change is desired from dancing, cards, and the usual amusements.

Let one of the party go out of the room and those remaining choose three objects, to be called respectively One, Two, and Three. These objects can be either persons or things, or a combination of both. Choice is not limited in any way. When the player comes in he is asked what he will do with Number One, then with Number Two, and so on. If the answers he gives are possible in connection with the object or person represented by the numbers, he passes, and another is sent out. If not, he must go out again.

Suppose, for instance, Independence Hall is chosen for Number One, Roosevelt for Number Two, and the cow that jumped over the moon for Number Three. If in answer to "What will you do with Number One?" he replies, "I will paint it green," in answer to Number Two, "I will send it to Coventry," and to Number Three, "I will write a poem about it," he would pass. But if any one answer had been an impossibility, as, for instance, if in answer to Number Two he had said, "I will make honey out of it," he would have to try over again.

Another game that is lots of fun is to appoint one in the crowd "Confessor." The rest are "Penitents." The Confessor writes on a slip of paper what is to be the cardinal sin. This is folded and laid aside, and no one knows what it is but the Confessor. The players are given in turn a little indicator to spin to show the number of sins they must confess, or they can draw from slips of paper with numbers on them. The numbers should not run too high, or the game becomes too lengthy. This number of sins must then be confessed. For instance, if the indicator stops at four, or one draws a slip with four on it, he must confess four sins to the Confessor. The confessions can be made in writing if preferred, the Confessor reading each confession aloud when it is finished. But it is more fun for each in turn to tell his sins in the hearing of all. No one can confess a sin which has already been confessed, and all who confess the cardinal sin must pay a forfeit when the game is over, at which time the Confessor opens the slip of paper on which is written the cardinal sin and tells the crowd what it is.

If slips are drawn to indicate the number of sins to be confessed, it also adds to the fun if one of these is blank. The one drawing this is the Angel, who has no sins to confess. The one confessing the greatest number of sins is the Black Sheep.

THE DOUBLE CROSS

A Great American Mystery Story by Gilson Willets

CHAPTER XL. (Continued.)

IN the closet were many pairs of slippers and gowns hung in rows above the slippers. Among those gowns I marked, particularly, that wild rose frock which Felipa had worn at supper on the night the stranger first appeared at the hacienda.

Yes, it was only too evident that during my three days in the mine, Felipa had been living in this house. Perhaps she had been a "guest" in this bungalow many times before, too. Otherwise, why should she keep such an extensive wardrobe here?

I proceeded next to roam all over the house and the grounds, in the course of which inspection I made the most amazing discovery of all. In a closet in each room in the house I found a black cloak, either of velvet or broadcloth, and a black mask. Even in the pergola in the garden, and in the kitchen, and on the front porch as well as on the back porch, I found, in each place, in a chest, a cloak and mask. It was evident that the stranger had provided thus at every point against anyone coming upon him unmasked. But why he should always provide against anyone finding him without a cloak I could not so easily understand.

And now—they had flown together to Mexico City. When Romero said that only "the master" had left in the motor car he lied. For here was the evidence that both of them had dressed in a frightful hurry—evidently bent upon getting away before I woke up. Moreover, Felipa had left a pair of black silk stockings and a pair of black satin slippers lying on the floor of the stranger's room.

Yet Felipa had entreated me to trust her, love her, despite everything.

St. John's Resolve

"I will tear her out of my heart," I told myself, as, after gulping only the coffee and neglecting the rest of the breakfast which Romero set before me, I hurried through the back streets on my way to the railroad station.

"Why should you expect me to be the saint?"

No wonder she had asked me that question!

"But, Felipa," I argued with myself, "I loved you because I believed you were the saint—the saint who came to my stateroom that night in mid-ocean and whose hand I swore I had grasped to hold forever more."

A few minutes later I muttered: "So the stranger chartered a special train for Mexico City, did he? Well, I'll charter a special, too. I've plenty of money."

Upon reflection, however, I remembered that to charter a special train would draw attention to me, the very thing I wished to avoid. And I was now presumably a peon, too. A peon chartering a special train? Absurd! No, I would have to travel third class, consistent with my supposed humble rank. Besides, to charter a special I would have to change one of my thousand-dollar bills. And Meldrum had cautioned me against that very thing.

"Wonder why he requested that I keep the money—intact?" I asked myself.

Then my thoughts returned to Felipa and the stranger till, all of a sudden—I stood still in my tracks.

"That's it," I murmured, excitedly. "They are married."

CHAPTER XLI.

The Firefly Lady.

AT 8 o'clock that night I walked through the railroad station at Mexico City and stepped into a yellow cab—yellow being the cheapest, red the medium priced and blue first class. I, being a peon, was the natural fare of the yellow.

Half an hour later I paid a small fee at the entrance to a garden lighted by many Japanese and Chinese lanterns. I entered, found hundreds of persons promenading under the trees, while, on a large platform, scores of couples danced to the music of a military band. All were masked. Many wore quaint or ridiculous costumes.

Wearing a mask which I had bought of a vendor at the gate, I now stepped upon the platform to look for my lady of the fireflies.

She was nowise difficult to discover. I mean that masked women wearing fireflies enmeshed in their hair and in their gauzy costumes were to be seen here, there, everywhere. One after the other, thus decorated—wearing such [illegible] ornaments in lieu of jewels—glided by in the slow waltz of the country. Others stood around the edge of the platform, waiting for partners. All these senoritas and senoras, however, had the black hair of the women of Mexico.

My particular lady of the fireflies was to be a blonde. Where was she?

I had no sooner asked myself that question than she appeared. A woman wearing a red domino and a red mask—a woman with wondrous golden tresses—had stepped upon the platform and was coming directly to me. Her hair was done up to represent a mock coronet; and in the coronet were enmeshed many fireflies emitting a beautiful glow.

The $50,000

"Here you are, senor," she said, as she reached my side. "Come. Let us dance."

"Here is the money—for safe keeping," I said, handing her a roll consisting of the fifty one-thousand dollar bills.

"Money!" she exclaimed, as if perplexed. "Senor, since money figures in this matter make certain that I am the woman you seek."

She raised her red mask.

"Alva!" I exclaimed, in a tone of delight. "So it is you. Well—I expected you. I am glad. May I ask you kindly to give that money—fifty thousand dollars—to the Minister of Justice, or to my 'trustee' direct? It is the proof that I possess a little financial ability."

"I did not come here to be your banker," she said. "However, if you insist upon thrusting fifty thousand dollars upon me, I will give it to Senor Reyes, as you request. What I came here for was—about cancelling our marriage contract."

"Oh, that," I exclaimed. "Never mind that. Let it stand."

"No," she persisted. "You love Felipa. Very well. You cannot marry her till you are freed from our contract. The supposed death of poor Don Justino prevented you from meeting me at the railroad station the other night as we agreed. But the Senor Reyes still has the application for the annulment ready for you to sign."

"But I have torn Felipa out of my heart," I protested.

"Let us dance—according to order," she said.

We glided down the platform in the slow waltz. And for a moment or two I forgot all the world excepting just her. My arm was around her waist. I peered into her eyes, under her red mask, and did I fancy?—she leaned back strangely heavily, so that I, instead of [illegible] her lightly, seemed now to be holding almost her entire weight, for I was obliged to tighten my clasp around her waist, as if to keep her from falling.

A Whim.

"I've often called you a sorcerer," she said, bringing me back to earthly existence. "Then we will separate. My duenna is waiting for me at the gate. I will leave here in a cab. A motor car will come for you. Jump into it when it pulls up at the gate—a wine-colored limousine. It will bring you to my house."

"But I will go with you—in the cab. Why not?"

"No! It is my whim," she insisted. "You wait for the car. The driver has instructions to bring you to the Alvarado Mansion, a safe asylum for you until—you marry Felipa."

"I'm not going to marry Felipa," I protested. "I have reason to believe that she is the wife of the stranger."

Alva seemed startled. We stopped dancing.

"If the stranger is really the son of Leon Alvarado," I said, "then you and I, Alva, are in the same sad predicament. The man you love and the woman I love are already married."

She smiled now, bewitchingly, an inscrutable smile. "You will marry Felipa, all the same, John, and come into possession of your father's fortune."

"My fortune? How? Are you not the true woman of the cross?"

"Does not Felipa also bear the sign of the cross, John? Well, then, it is for you to determine which is the true cross—not taking into consideration the marriage contract, which will be made void tomorrow."

I went to the gate with her, where we met her duenna. The two women at once stepped into a blue cab.

The Wrong Woman

"So Meldrum brought you into this proceedings, did he, as well as Felipa?" I said this to Alva, as the cab was about to start.

"No, he didn't," she cried, with a gleeful chuckle. "I don't know Meldrum. Drive on, cochero."

And away the blue cab sped, leaving me with the suspicion that I had made some mistake in the matter of the "blonde." Great Heavens! I had given Alva the money. Was she the right blonde?

Just then a pordiosero—Meldrum, of course—stepped up, whining, "For God's sake, one centavo!"

And on the other side of me stood a blonde woman, young and, as I could see, an American. She had many fireflies in her hair, too.

"For God's sake," Meldrum went on, in his natural voice; "not a centavo, but fifty thousand dollars. Here's the lady. I'll walk away—and you give her the money."

He spoke in feverish haste.

"The money?" I cried. "I've already handed over the money."

Meldrum and the blonde both uttered exclamations of alarm.

"The wrong woman!" Meldrum gasped. "You have given the money to the wrong woman."

CHAPTER XLII

At the Alvarado Mansion

"YES, some strange woman is in this game," Meldrum then cried. "Sam and Doc," he added, "have supplied a blonde of their own choosing."

"No, they have not," I denied. "The blonde to whom I gave that money was no confederate of theirs. She was—the Golden Senorita."

"The Senorita Alva? Why did she meet you here? How did she know you would be here?"

"She met me here—for a good reason. How she knew I would be here—that is a puzzle."

"Where did you stand when you passed her the money?" Meldrum asked.

"There—on the platform."

"Then Sam and Doc saw you hand her the notes. That was as arranged, of course. But when they saw her go away—did she go away?—in a cab? I will arrest Sam and Doc at once."

His eyes meantime searched among the trees.

"[illegible] to stand right there!" he exclaimed. "They have gone—and they are on the track of the Golden Senorita. She is in terrible danger. We must find her."

Just then a big wine-colored touring car rolled up to the gate.

"That's my car," I cried. "I'm off. I'll see Alva and warn her. She told me to use this car to her house."

"Then use it quick," Meldrum urged. "And get Alva to—but no! I see Sam and Doc here now. They are not following her, after all. The game is saved if you can get Alva to bring that money to the Hotel Jardin—your own apartments there—within an hour. I'll tell Sam and Doc she has gone there with the money—and they will have Royal and Terry on hand and we'll bag the entire gang just as planned. Hurry!"

The Black Mask Again

I stepped into the motor car to find myself seated beside—the stranger in the black mask.

Was I surprised? Not the least. I had become accustomed, absolutely callous, to surprise where that man was concerned.

"The Senorita Alva asked me to call for you here," he explained. "When did you leave Guanajuato—Leon? Last night or this morning at daylight?"

"This morning. Why?"

"And Felipa with you?"

"No. Felipa is at the Hotel Jardin—waiting for you. She has arranged for your wedding to take place at once, before a magistrate."

"Thank you for the information," I said, "but I shall not marry Felipa."

The car was now rolling along at the limit allowed by the speed laws of the capital.

"John," the stranger said, "Felipa loves you. Did she not get your promise last night—that you would trust her, love her, despite everything you see or hear or know. Take her, John. Marry and love her always. She is the saint in all Mexico."

His earnestness made me reflect that perhaps my idea that they were married was absurd. Nevertheless, there was some asperity in my tone as I cried:

"Saint? Oh, she's a perfect saint. It must be a great pleasure to have a saint leaving silk stockings and satin slippers in one's bedroom. So connubial, you know."

We had run far out on the broad road toward Chapultepec. When we were about half a mile or so from the President's Palace, the car pulled in through an archway forming the entrance to a mansion of white marble.

That beautiful dwelling was built round the four sides of a central court, or patio, where were many trees and flowers. In a quick glance around the patio I noted dwarf trees from Japan and rare plants that, obviously, had been brought from other countries, giving the place the look of a botanical garden.

Here's where Desperate Desmond is up against it. He's some fighter, we admit, but he is not in the same class with the United States Navy. To be sure, Claude hasn't got the whole navy with him, but even the U. S. Dogfish alone ought to be able to cope with a villain of Desmond's extremely low calibre.

The only trouble is that Desmond is such a crooked fighter. He's liable to spring some low down subterfuge which puts real classy fighters like those navy guys at a disadvantage. They're not used to that rough stuff. When they want to shoot a man up they write him a polite note about it.

Furthermor, they wouldn't think of making war on women, even if Claude Eclaire would stand for it, which he won't. No matter how badly Claude wants to get Desmond, he wouldn't harm a hair of Rosamond's head. If she wore phony puffs it might be different, but all her hair was grown on the premises.

Fortunately the admiral has an old-fashioned mortar stowed away in the hold. At Claude's suggestion he orders it up on deck and bids the gunners get busy. The advantage of a mortar is that you can shoot up in the air and hit your man on the bean when he isn't looking. But it must be aimed very carefully.

Desmond is an old hand at the shell game. He knows just when to duck. If a man doesn't know that, he shouldn't try to be a villain. Even an honest man may occasionally find it to his advantage to sidestep at the psychological moment. The psychological moment is just before the other guy lands on you.

It seems a shame to wreck a first-class sailboat just to get even with a cowardly cur like Desmond, and it's still worse when you don't get him. But Uncle Sam pays the bill, so who cares? Will they capture Desmond in the next picture? We refuse to answer. Buy Monday's paper and see for yourself.

The Show Girl Would Like to See the Boy de Boolong

By HANK

"I WISH I could see the Boys de Boolong and the Champs Delicious," said the Show Girl with a sigh as she toyed indifferently with a plate of beans in the Cafe des Enfants.

"I guess I can get a couple of seats," replied Percy generously. "Where are they playing?"

"Stop your kidding," said the Show Girl. "I mean them beautiful French esplandeys that they have in Paris."

"Oh!" exclaimed Percy. "You mean you'd like to travel?"

"Such intelligence," commented the Show Girl. "How did you ever guess it? Of course, I'd like to travel. This town is getting on my nerves. I've got some friends that just made a trip all around the place and the things they seen were wonderful."

"Well," said Percy, "let's suppose that you had a lot of dough, where would you like to go?"

A Wide Open Place

"Monte Carlo and the Boys de Boolong," said the Show Girl enthusiastically, "I sure would like to hit the wheel in Monte Carlo. That must be a great place. You don't have to worry about no cops knocking the door down with an axe and hauling you off to the judge. No, sir, you can pawn your socks and do what you want with your money."

"You spend your money here just the same," said Percy. "Why, you can't go into a dry goods store without going for it there. I should think you'd be better satisfied to buy things for your dough than to hand it all to a croupier."

"A croupier, what's that," asked the Show Girl.

"That's the guy in Monte Carlo who hauls your money across the table with a little wooden rake," Percy explained.

"Chee!" exclaimed the Show Girl. "I thought you were talking about a disease. That's a fierce name to have to carry around. Another place I'd like to see would be Napoleon's Tomb."

"What's the matter with Grant's Tomb and Mount Vernon in this country?" asked Percy.

"Oh, they're all right, but they aren't as distinguished a tomb as Nap's," said the Show Girl. "You see Nap was better looking."

The Places She'd See

"You ought to have your generals made to order for you," remarked Percy. "Well, where else would you go if you had money?"

"Oh Africa, Australia and Siberia," the Show Girl told him.

"Siberia?" exclaimed Percy. "What would you want to go there for?"

"I'd like to see the convicts," said the Show Girl, "with the Czar standing over them with a whip. I'd just like to tell him something, the brute. Just think what a sight that must be, the Czar, dressed in his fine ermine robes, with a crown on, ordering them poor convicts around in the snow. If I was President Taft I'd send that Czar to Sing Sing. He ain't got no right to live."

"You must have the idea that a Czar is like a boss in a sweatshop," said Percy. "The Czar doesn't wade around in the snow. He's too busy seeing that his laundry does up his bullet-proof shirts right to trouble about convicts. What would you do in Africa?"

"Ride an Arab steed around the desert, climb the pyramids and maybe shoot a lion."

"Yes, and you'd probably try to do it all in a hobble skirt, too," said Percy. "You'd make a great traveler, you would. Better come to life and finish your beans, they're getting cold."

"Say, Percy," asked the Show Girl timidly, "can you lend me a nickel?"

"Sure, what for?" replied her companion.

"For traveling expenses," said the Show Girl, "I left my subway tickets home."

The Red Corpuscle

By WEX JONES

THE Red Corpuscle has taken a place in the affairs of the city. Copies of every number are mailed to Police Commissioner O'Meara in the hope that the enormous amount of action condensed into our pages will impel him to action.

Mr. Smith writes from Brookline: "Your magazine is too fast. When reading some of the stories I completely lose my breath, and, as my heart is weak, I am afraid serious harm may result. Slow up a little in your action." Of course, we can't comply with Mr. Smith's request, but for his benefit, and that of thousands of others, we have at great expense prepared the following directions for training the lungs to stand the strain of our stories:

On arising walk out into the street.

Pick out a section of air that seems more or less pure.

Inhale a large chunk of it.

Keep on doing this until the lungs feel as if they were about to burst.

Do not let them burst, but exhale the air slowly.

Repeat this until you are dizzy.

After six months of this you will find that not even a typical Red Corpuscle story will take your breath away.

THE KNIGHT OF THE WALLOPPE.

A romance which shows that bustle existed even in the days of chivalry.

Sir Folding Bedivere, despite the enormous weight of his armor, vaulted upon the back of his gigantic warhorse and spurred forth in search of adventure.

(In the days of chivalry this was quite a customary proceeding. Nowadays he who goes forth in search of adventure usually begins by being arrested, or pinched, as the vernacular has it.—Eds.)

No sooner had he crossed the portcullis than a sinister bastion came into sight, but Sir Folding, with a single blow, cleft the varlet's head from his shoulders.

Greatly comforted by this deed, the good knight beat it upon his way.

Presently he was opposed by a donjon, but, no wit dismayed, Sir Folding ran the fierce animal through and through with his hauberk. From this feat the knight derived his title of the Donjon Dingbat, meaning one who sorely dings and bats any wicked donjons that he may encounter.

In his moment of victory Sir Folding was beset by a score of lusty knaves, and, although it was not yet nightfall, nevertheless he fell.

But the blows of the cudgels upon his armor rang like strokes upon a gong, and in a few moments help arrived and the knight was taken home, where his wife made him change his damp armor to avert a cold, and where Sir Folding Bedivere ever after remained in what peace a married knight may know.

WALTER SCHOOPS, PSYCHOLOGIST.

In which the new detective is shown baffling the old-fashioned criminal.

Schoops was a psychological detective. In other words, he did not believe in visiting the scene of a murder and examining the legs of the table with a microscope and measuring the area of the carpet with a pedometer. Schoops simply asked persons questions about the crime he might be investigating, and from their replies judged their guilty knowledge.

Schoops was coming from the subway when I saw him.

"Anything doing?" I asked. (I am like Dr. Watson; there to ask Schoops foolish questions.)

He made no reply.

Suddenly he stopped an old man who was making his way to the subway and said:

"Pearls."

Then I knew Schoops was on the great Vanmorgan pearl robbery.

The old man said nothing.

"Robbery," said Schoops.

The old man made no reply.

"Jail," yelled Schoops.

The old man shook his head and said: "I am deaf."

Schoops looked distressed.

He produced a pearl and a piece of paper, but before he could write a word the old man had gone down the steps of the subway.

"Psychology cannot compete with deafness," he said, with an air of finality.

And, so far as I can see, he was right.

Lysander John's Home Life

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

"I AM glad we are to spend the evening at home," said Mrs. Lysander John Appleton to her husband. "It will be so nice to have a quiet evening of peace and harmonious thinking together."

Then she picked up a newspaper, while her husband, with a grunt of satisfaction, because her intention to read would give him an opportunity to do the same, picked up another.

"Twelve killed in an automobile wreck," read the wife. "Isn't that just awful! This man had his head smashed to a pulp! Just think of that, will you, Lysander John? He started out full of life and with heart beating high and had his head smashed to a pulp. Dear me, dear me! Just think what it must mean to a woman to have her husband brought home looking like that."

There was silence for five minutes, and then Mrs. Appleton screamed.

"It is just too horrible to read," she said. "Just drop your paper while I read it. A man went crazy and killed his wife and eloped with the cook. You men are getting worse every day. To lose a cook and a husband at the same time! That poor, dear wife! My heart bleeds for her."

Silence this time for three minutes, and then such a scream of terror Lysander John fell off his chair.

"War with Mexico!" wailed the wife, looking for her handkerchief, "and my poor second cousin lives right near there, somewhere in Arizona. If her husband joins the Texas Rangers, and he will, because he is a man and selfish, she will be left on the ranch alone and the Mexicans will come up and murder her."

When Mrs. Lysander John looked up from her paper a few minutes later with the tears rolling down her cheeks because an American mission had been attacked in China, she found herself alone.

The quiet evening devoted to peace and harmonious thinking had proven too much for her husband and he had sneaked off to bed.

Christmas Helps

CHILD'S GIFT

I KEEP the comic part of the SUNDAY AMERICAN all year around and at Christmas time I take a piece of cardboard and some white rags and cut any size, then I paste the pictures on and make a book of each kind, then I make small holes in the middle and draw a ribbon through and make a little bow at the top. You should varnish with thin varnish to make it shine.

TO CLEAN SILVER

FOR washing silver put half a teaspoonful ammonia into suds; have the water hot; wash quickly, using a small brush; rinse in hot water and dry with a clean linen towel, then rub dry with a chamois skin. Washed in this manner silver becomes brilliant, requires no polishing with any of the powders or whiting usually employed and does not wear out. Jewelry can be made to look like new by washing in ammonia water. Put half a teaspoonful into clear water to wash tumblers or glass of any description.

WHEN FRYING DOUGHNUTS

WHEN frying doughnuts success depends largely on having the fat at just the right heat. To test it dip a match quickly into the hot fat, and if it ignites the fat it is hot enough to fry doughnuts.

THE RAJAH'S DIAMOND

A New Series of Prince Florizel's Adventures in "New Arabian Nights," by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

THE manner of Prince Florizel and the ex-dictator of Paraguay, aptly fitted with his part in the discourse. The dictator indulged in brutalities alike of speech and gesture; his hand opened and shut and fell roughly on the table, and his voice was loud and heady.

The prince, on the other hand, seemed the very type of urbane docility and quiet; the least movement, the least inflection, had with him a weightier significance than all the shouts and pantomime of his companion, and if ever, as must frequently have been the case, he described some experience personal to himself, it was so aptly dissimulated as to pass unnoticed with the rest.

At length the talk wandered on to the late robberies and the Rajah's Diamond.

"That diamond would be better in the sea," observed Prince Florizel.

"As a Vandeleur," replied the dictator, "your highness may imagine my dissent."

"I speak on grounds of public policy," pursued the prince. "Jewels so valuable should be preserved for the collection of a prince or the treasury of a great nation. To hand them about among the common sort of men is to set a price on Virtue's head; and if the Rajah of Kashgar—a prince, I understand, of great enlightenment—desired vengeance upon the men of Europe, he could hardly have gone more efficaciously about his purpose than by sending us this apple of discord. There is no honesty too robust for such a trial.

"I myself, who have many duties and privileges of my own—I myself, Mr. Vandeleur, could scarcely handle the intoxicating crystal and be safe. As for you, who are a diamond hunter by taste and profession, I do not believe there is a crime in the calendar you would not perpetrate—I do not believe you have a friend in the world whom you would not eagerly betray—I do not know if you have a family, but if you have I declare you would sacrifice your children—and all this for what? Not to be richer, nor to have more comforts or more respect, but simply to call this diamond yours for a year or two until you die, and now and again to open a safe and look at it as one looks at a picture."

On the Diamond's Trail

"It is true," replied Vandeleur. "I have hunted most things, from men and women down to mosquitoes; I have dived for coral; I have followed both whales and tigers; and a diamond is the tallest quarry of the lot. It has beauty and worth; it alone can properly reward the ardors of the chase. At this moment, as your highness may fancy, I am upon the trail; I have a sure knack, a wide experience; I know every stone of price in my brother's collection as a shepherd knows his sheep; and I wish I may die if I do not recover them every one!"

"Sir Thomas Vandeleur will have great cause to thank you," said the prince.

"I am not so sure," returned the dictator, with a laugh. "One of the Vandeleurs will. Thomas or John—Peter or Paul—we are all apostles."

"I did not catch your observation," said the prince with some disgust.

At the same moment the waiter informed Mr. Vandeleur that his cab was at the door.

Mr. Rolles glanced at the clock and saw that he also must be moving; and the coincidence struck him sharply and unpleasantly, for he desired to see no more of the diamond hunter.

Much study having somewhat shaken the young man's nerves, he was in the habit of traveling in the most luxurious manner; and for the present journey he had taken a sofa in the sleeping carriage.

"You will be very comfortable," said the guard; "there is no one in your compartment, and only one old gentleman in the other end."

It was close upon the hour, and the tickets were being examined, when Mr. Rolles beheld this other fellow passenger ushered by several porters into his place; certainly there was not another man in the world whom he would not have preferred—for it was old John Vandeleur, the ex-dictator.

The sleeping carriages on the Great Northern line were divided into three compartments—one at each end for travellers, and one in the centre fitted with the conveniences of a lavatory. A door running in grooves separated each of the others from the lavatory, but as there were neither bolts nor locks, the whole suite was practically common ground.

When Mr. Rolles had studied his position he perceived himself without defence. If the dictator chose to pay him a visit in the course of the night, he could do no less than receive it, he had no means of fortification, and lay open to attack as if he had been lying in the fields. This situation caused him some agony of mind. He recalled with alarm the boastful statements of his fellow traveller across the dining table, and the professions of immorality which he had heard him offering to the disgusted prince.

Some persons, he remembered to have read, are endowed with a singular quickness of perception for the neighborhood of precious metals; through walls and even at considerable distances they are said to divine the presence of gold. Might it not be the same with diamonds? he wondered; and if so, who was more likely to enjoy this transcendental sense than the person who gloried in the appellation of the diamond hunter? From such a man he recognized that he had everything to fear, and longed eagerly for the arrival of the day.

Rolles Takes Precaution

In the meantime he neglected no precaution, concealed his diamond in the most internal pocket of a system of great-coats, and devoutly recommended himself to the care of Providence.

The train pursued its usual even and rapid course; and nearly half the journey had been accomplished before slumber began to triumph over uneasiness in the breast of Mr. Rolles. For some time he resisted its influence; but it grew upon him more and more, and soon he was fain to stretch himself upon one of the couches and suffer his eyes to close, and almost at the same instant consciousness deserted the young clergyman. His last thought was of his terrifying neighbor.

When he awoke it was still pitch dark, except for the flicker of the veiled lamp, and the continual roaring and oscillation testified to the unrelaxed velocity of the train. He sat upright in a panic, for he had been tormented by the most uneasy dreams; it was some seconds before he recovered his self-command, and even after he had resumed a recumbent attitude sleep continued to flee him, and he lay awake with his brain in a state of violent agitation, and his eyes fixed upon the lavatory door.

Mr. Rolles pulled his clerical felt hat over his brow still further to shield him from the light; and he adopted the usual expedients, such as counting a thousand or banishing thought, by which experienced invalids are accustomed to woo the approach of sleep.

In the case of Mr. Rolles they proved, one and all, vain; he was harassed by a dozen different anxieties—the old man in the other end of the carriage haunted him in the most alarming shapes, and in whatever attitude he chose to lie the diamond in his pocket occasioned him a sensible physical distress. It burned, it was too large, it bruised his ribs; and there were infinitesimal fractions of a second in which he had half a mind to throw it from the window.

While he was thus lying, a strange incident took place.

The sliding door in to the lavatory stirred a little, and then a little more, and was finally drawn back for the space of about twenty inches. The lamp in the lavatory was unshaded, and in the lighted aperture, thus disclosed Mr. Rolles could see the head of Mr. Vandeleur in an attitude of deep attention.

He was conscious that the gaze of the dictator rested intently on his own face; and the instinct of self-preservation moved him to hold his breath, to refrain from the least movement, and keeping his eyes lowered, to watch his visitor from underneath the lashes. After about a moment, the head was withdrawn and the door of the lavatory replaced.

The dictator had not come to attack, but to observe; his action was not that of a man threatening another, but that of a man who was himself threatened; if Mr. Rolles was afraid of him, it appeared that he, in his turn, was not quite easy on the score of Mr. Rolles. He had come, it would seem, to make sure that his only fellow-traveler was asleep; and, when satisfied on that point, he had at once withdrawn.

The clergyman leaped to his feet. The extreme of terror had given place to a reaction of foolhardy daring. He reflected that the rattle of the flying train concealed all other sounds, and determined, come what may, to return the visit he had just received.

Divesting himself of his cloak, which might have interfered with the freedom of his action, he entered the lavatory and paused to listen. As he had expected, there was nothing to be heard above the roar of the train's progress; and laying his hand on the door at the further side, he proceeded cautiously to draw it back for about six inches. Then he stopped, and could not contain an ejaculation of surprise.

John Vandeleur wore a fur traveling cap with lappets to protect his ears; and this may have combined with the sound of the express to keep him in ignorance of what was going forward. It is certain, at least, that he did not raise his head, but continued without interruption to pursue his strange employment.

Between his feet stood an open hat box; in one hand he held the sleeve of his sealskin great-coat; in the other a formidable knife, with which he had just slit up the lining of the sleeve. Mr. Rolles had read of persons carrying money in a belt; and as he had no acquaintance with any but cricket belts, he had never been able rightly to conceive how this was managed.

But here was a stranger thing before his eyes; for John Vandeleur, it appeared, carried diamonds in the lining of his sleeve; and even as the young clergyman gazed, he could see one glittering brilliant drop after another into the hat box.

He stood riveted to the spot, following this unusual business with his eyes. The diamonds were, for the most part, small, and not easily distinguishable either in shape or fire.

Suddenly the dictator appeared to find a difficulty; he employed both hands and stooped over his task; but it was not until after considerable manoeuvring that he extricated a large tiara of diamonds from the lining, and held it up for some seconds' examination before he placed it with the others in the hat box. The tiara was a ray of light to Mr. Rolles; he immediately recognized it for a part of the treasure stolen from Harry Hartley by the loiterer.

There was no room for mistake; it was exactly as the detective had described it; there were the ruby stars, with a great emerald in the centre; there were the interlacing crescents; and there were the pear shaped pendants, each a single stone, which gave a special value to Lady Vandeleur's tiara.

Mr. Rolles was hugely relieved. The dictator was as deeply in the affair as he was; neither could tell tales upon the other. In the first glow of happiness, the clergyman suffered a deep sigh to escape him; and as his bosom had become choked and his throat dry during his previous suspense, the sigh was followed by a cough.

Mr. Vandeleur looked up; his face contracted with the blackest and most deadly passion; his eyes opened widely, and his under jaw dropped in an astonishment that was upon the brink of fury. By an instinctive movement he had covered the hat box with the coat. For half a minute the two men stared upon each other in silence.

It was a long interval, but it sufficed for Mr. Rolles; he was one of those who think swiftly on dangerous occasions; he decided on a course of action of a singularly daring nature, and although he felt he was setting his life upon the hazard, he was the first to break silence.

"I beg your pardon," said he.

The dictator shivered slightly, and when he spoke his voice was hoarse.

"What do you want here?" he asked.

"I take particular interest in diamonds," replied Mr. Rolles, with an air of perfect self-possession. "Two connoisseurs should be acquainted. I have here a trifle of my own which may perhaps serve for an introduction."

And so saying, he quietly took the case from his pocket, showed the Rajah's Diamond to the dictator for an instant, and replaced it in security.

"It was once your brother's," he added.

John Vandeleur continued to regard him with a look of almost painful amazement, but he neither spoke nor moved.

"I was pleased to observe," resumed the young man, "that we have gems from the same collection."

The dictator's surprise overpowered him.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "I begin to perceive that I am growing old! I am positively not prepared for little incidents like this. But set my mind at rest upon one point: do my eyes deceive me, or are you indeed a parson?"

"I am in holy orders," answered Mr. Rolles.

"Well," cried the other, "as long as I live I will never hear another word against the cloth."

"You flatter me," said Mr. Rolles.

"Pardon me," replied Vandeleur; "pardon me, young man. You are no coward, but it still remains to be seen whether you are not the worst of fools. Perhaps," he continued, leaning back upon his seat, "perhaps you would oblige me with a few particulars. I must suppose you had some object in the stupefying impudence of your proceedings, and I confess I have a curiosity to know it."

"It is very simple," replied the clergyman; "it proceeds from my great inexperience of life."

"I shall be glad to be persuaded," answered Vandeleur.

TODAY'S STOCK MARKETS; FINANCIAL NEWS

STOCKS DROP, BUT RECOVER

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—Although early trading in Wall street today was active, prices ruled fractionally lower than yesterday's strong close.

Heavy selling in Steel common caused an early decline of ⅝. Later this stock recovered part of the loss.

Some surprise was manifested in Interboro-Metropolitan preferred, which during the first fifteen minutes of trading sold off ⅝ of a point. Union Pacific, Reading and Lehigh Valley yielded about half a point each. Northern Pacific, New York Central, Southern Pacific and Great Northern pref. were slightly lower.

Toward the end of the first hour of trading a steadier tone prevailed and many of the stocks succeeded in recovering part of their early losses.

Early trading on the curb during the early day was strong and active. Standard Oil was the feature.

In London Americans were dull.

BINGHAM, RINDGE FOOTBALL CAPTAIN

Leslie Bingham, picked by many as right tackle of the all-scholastic second footall eleven, will captain the Rindge Manual Training School team for 1911. Bingham was one of the strongest players on the Rindge team, and, while not as prominent as were Benoit and Anderson of Malden High in running with the ball, was in every other way their equal. His choice was unanimous.

EXILED KING MANUEL 'BROKE'

ROME, Dec. 10.—The Tribuna prints an interview with a Portuguese personage, concerning Manuel II., the exiled King of Portugal. Manuel, he says, is poverty-stricken. Owing to lack of money, the dethroned king has been compelled to accept the hospitality of the Duke of Orleans. For three months he has not had means to pay his own servants.

SAFE EMPTY, ROB A METER

Burglars dragged the half-ton safe from the coal office of A. Hohman at No. 336 Dorchester avenue, South Boston, in the darkness early to-day and broke it to pieces with a sledge hammer in the back yard. When the door flew off they found there was nothing in the safe. So they went back into the office and clubbed the gas meter into fragments. That yielded them two or three dollars.

CHILDREN TO AID CHRISTMAS BAZAAR

The Free Home for Consumptives has its annual bazaar at Horticultural Hall, on Friday and Saturday, December 16 and 17. Fifteen children from the Helen Guest Dramatic school will take part with children from the Isabel School of Dancing. The greatest feature will be, "The Wonderful Christmas Trees." Mrs. A. Niland of East Boston, is to preside over the "Children's Santa Claus Tree," every child receiving a present. Mrs. K. Brennan of Jamaica Plain, has charge of "The Fairy Apple Tree" for the "grown-ups." The Holly Tree Inn will be in charge of Misses Noonan, Doran and Smith, and a wonderful menu is to be furnished. A free Christmas dinner and a barrel of apples will find their way to some lucky person. There will be candy camps, grab-bags, fortune-tellers, combination mysteries, antique displays, novelties and surprises without number.

PASTOR SAVES FOUR FROM DEPORTATION

Rev. G. Charles Gray, identified with the Hope chapel, has halted the deportation of James McGuinness, his wife and two children, who were to have been sent back to their native land on the Pretorian. Upon examination by the immigration officials it was found that McGuinness and his family were without funds or relatives in America. Unknown to any of the immigration officials and even to McGuinness himself the matter was brought to the attention of Mr. Gray, who filed an appeal with the department of commerce at Washington asking that the deportation proceedings be delayed long enough for an investigation. At the last minute a communication arrived from Washington ordering that the family be held.

AMATEURS AMUSE AT COLUMBIA THEATRE

Many new features which kept the audience in roars of laughter were introduced at the amateur night at the Columbia Theatre. The talent kept the handlers of the hook working overtime, and the wheelbarrow gathered many victims. Clair R. Churchill, a singer and sketch artist, made a decided hit and was given first prize, while Miss Helen Barry, a dainty miss from the South End, captured second honors.

PEARSON WILL BE FOSS'S CHIEF OF STAFF

Governor-elect Foss has notified Captain Gardner W. Pearson of Lowell that he is to be appointed adjutant-general and chief of the Governor's staff. Captain Pearson, who is the nephew and was the ward of General Benjamin F. Butler, was born in Lowell September 4, 1868. Educated in the public schools of Lowell, the Institute of Technology, Harvard College and Harvard Law School, he was admitted to the bar in 1890.

THE FUNNIEST PUZZLE. It won't be hard to solve, but you'll vote it the most entertaining contest you ever entered. It will be in the Great City Life Section of the SUNDAY AMERICAN.

Pianos and Musical Instruments.

CHRISTMAS PIANO SALE

$5 Down—$1 a Week
Delivered anywhere in unmarked wagons

Last Sunday in our announcement we showed you a picture of only one corner of our Main Storage Salesroom floor, and you must have noticed the great number of pianos in view. We worked all the week to prepare for our big holiday season sale, and have taken from our storage dozens of pianos and completely covered our main floor, which is the length and width of an entire block. Pianos of all well known makes are here for your strictest investigation. No matter what make piano you select, we give you our personal guarantee in addition to the maker's guarantee, which of course accompanies each instrument. People now realize that on account of the nature of our piano sales, which are, of course, necessarily sacrifice sales, any make piano can be bought from us at a price so low that the wise, economical people must do themselves the justice of, at least, seeing the make piano wanted and getting our lowest price on the instrument before buying anywhere.

Christmas Pianos Free TO Charitable Institutions

As is his custom, the Founder and President of this Company, Mr. L. F. Collins, will give a number of pianos as Christmas presents to public or church charitable institutions, regardless of denomination. Every Christmas season for the past six years Mr. Collins has given as gifts a number of pianos to the girls or boys who were not able [illegible] who were unable to buy a piano. This year the pianos will be given to charitable institutions, because Mr. Collins believes that more people will be made happy by these pianos.

Mr. Collins will give any reasonable and worthy request his serious consideration.

A Talk with Those That Work in the Stores at Christmas Time—It Is a Hard Season

But It Is Also the Season When the Man or Woman Destined to Get Ahead PROVES His Ability and Lays the Foundation of Success

Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal-Examiner

This is the hardest season of the year for the tens of thousands of men, women, boys and girls that earn their living in the stores.

Under the best conditions, and with the best employers, the season is hard and painful for all.

The public, thoughtless and selfish, buys in crowds at the last minute. Work enough for ten days must often be done in one. The hours are long, buyers are often insolent and unreasonable. And many hard-working men and women feel that honest effort is not appreciated.

The Boston American sympathizes with those that bear the brunt of this season—the workers in the stores.

But here is something for the ambitious young man or woman to remember—this is your chance to prove what is in you, and to get out of the rut.

In dull, easy times almost any clerk is a good clerk.

Moving slowly along the road almost any horse looks like a race-horse and any automobile like a world-beater.

But in the stress of the race, and especially in the last few laps, we know which is the REAL racehorse, which is really the high power car and which is the man or woman or girl or boy fitted to win in the race of life.

Not only for your employer's sake, but for your own sake especially, AND TO FIND OUT JUST WHAT THERE IS IN YOU, make it your business to accomplish the best possible result this year.

Anybody can be polite with a polite customer; anybody can be patient when there is very little to do.

But the man or woman that will have future success is the one that can say, "I am going through this hard work IN MY WAY. I am going to prove that I have the stamina, the patience AND THE DETERMINATION that outside influences cannot shake."

If the rush of business does not make you lose your head; if the crowd about you does not fluster you; if the foolish impertinence of customers does not make you lose your balance and answer with impertinence just as foolish, although better justified, you are one of those that can hope to win in the real fight for success.

And remember that that success does not always come early. One of the richest men in the country to-day worked for years in a department store—always working faithfully, knowing that he thus DEVELOPED HIMSELF. He was past forty when his chance came, and he took it, because intelligent work had made him ready. He is richer now than the great firm that used to employ him.

The department store is the greatest business college in the world. The man or woman that cannot lay the foundation of business success in a big department store cannot learn success in business ANYWHERE. That man succeeds who knows how to deal with people of all kinds, how to be patient with all kinds of characters, how to keep his head in the rush—these are exactly the things that the big store teaches.

While you are doing extra work MAKE IT A RULE TO GET EXTRA SLEEP—you can do it if you will. In a crowded store the air is poor at best. Keep your window wide open at night; keep your head well covered up from the draft. Eat slowly, and if you haven't time to eat as much as you want at noon, SLOWLY, wait and eat slowly at the end of the day.

REMEMBER that the only thing you own IS YOUR OWN MIND AND BODY, AND OUT OF THEM YOUR SUCCESS MUST COME.

Remember, also, that your work, whatever it is, in the MENTAL GYMNASIUM in which your mind develops its qualities.

If you do not do your very best you are cheating yourself ten times more than you are cheating your employer. A valued citizen, Mr. Isaac Stern, died very recently in New York City. Thirty years ago, working in a small store, he had less chance than you have to-day, apparently, of achieving his extraordinary business success. He succeeded through intelligence and hard work. The intelligence without the hard work could have done him no good.

HE WASTED NO TIME DURING THE DAY COMPLAINING; he needed all his time for work—AND SO DO YOU IF YOU MEAN TO BE ONE OF THE FEW THAT SUCCEED AND NOT REMAIN FOREVER IN THE HERD THAT DRIFTS ALONG.

For those that work so hard, Christmas time is a season to be dreaded. But the man or woman who will, can look back to this season of the year as the time when success was established. Good luck to all that TRY.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

PENSIONS FOR MOTHERS

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

In your editorial upon A Union of Housewives you invite your readers to suggest rules for the organization proposed by Mrs. Victor Berger. Well, here is one:

We all agree that a woman in bringing up children is performing a function in society which is far more necessary to society than our public schools, for the support of which the citizens of the community are willing to pay taxes. Do you not think that it would be just as logical for society to pension the women who lose their only support through either the desertion or the death of their husbands and are reduced to a state of poverty and starvation because they remain faithful to their duty which nature and the government impose upon them?

And yet the government fails to realize that it is just as much its duty to compensate the women for the essential service they are rendering to society, as it is the women's duty to rear the future citizens to the best of their ability. Respectfully yours, ALFRED J. SMITH.

URGES HELP FOR POOR

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

With the coming of snow the thought comes to me that Winter is upon us, and in its wake misery for the poor homeless people who are in our midst. I do so hope that something will be done, and done promptly, to care for the many poor people, that their sufferings may be lessened. Surely there are enough philanthropic persons in this great, wealthy city who will aid in the noble and worthy work of caring for those upon whom fortune has not smiled. I want to thank you, Mr. Editor, for your noble work in aiding the poor, and hope that my suggestion will receive prompt response. Yours truly, M. M. M.

WANTS MORE SUBWAYS

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

I am a working girl, and am compelled to ride on the subway during the rush hours twice daily. Conditions are intolerable, and the wonder to me is that persons are not seriously injured in the crowding and rushing for even standing room in the cars. It is absolutely dangerous for elderly persons and young children to ride on the trains. MORE SUBWAYS.

BOOKLAND

EDWIN MARKHAM

John Vance Cheney and Roswell Field, Associate Editors.

THERE is a certain restaurant in New York which, in its constituency of bookmen and scribes has to-day a trace of the old retreat where Poe and some of his contemporaries were wont to meet and talk of "brave translunary things;" and it has also an echo of that old Mermaid Tavern of Ben Jonson's time, where the frolic wit of the diners outdid the wine and meat.

At this restaurant congregate (sometimes to sit all night) a group of writers and artists whose entrees of poetry and philosophy make the sound courses few and far between.

One would not imagine the keeper of this hostelry, as he softly watches the comfort of his guests, to be a man whose thoughts are out upon the large circuits of science and philosophy. And yet this keeper of the Muse's Inn, Joel Rinaldo, has written a daring little book called "Polygeneric Theory," a book which disputes the Darwinian theory of evolution, as well as the variants of Darwin's creed propounded by Weismann, Haeckel and De Vries.

Mr. Rinaldo believes that the identity of any living species is unchangeable. The giant sequoias of California, going back to the beginning of the Christian era, and their seedlings sprung up last year, are of identical structure. The hookworm of the South to-day and the hookworm found in the pyramids of the Ptolemies are also identical in structure. So, he claims, are all the species of animals and plants between these extremes of age and size.

Mr. Rinaldo agrees with many Greek scholars that in Genesis we should read "God creates," not "God created;" for he considers that creation goes on now as at the beginning. Whenever conditions are ripe for a species, that species is created. This, he thinks, is borne out by the different sets of animals that have ranged the earth in different geological periods.

The experiment which set Mr. Rinaldo's mind off on its planet-ranging quest is worth the trying. Put a clean orange upon an inch of clean sand in the sun in a tight-sealed glass jar. The solar energy, acting upon the gases of the fruit, will very soon begin to generate fungi and animal life. This, Mr. Rinaldo says, typifies the formula of the creative process whenever conditions are favorable.

I give here only a sparse outline of a book which Mr. Rinaldo had already pared to the quick. The volume is dedicated to Mr. William R. Hearst in the following words:

> "The publication of this book affords opportunity to pay public tribute to one of the finest and most practical acts of humanity that has ever come within the knowledge of the author. Certain houses on East Thirty-third street, the homes of a number of poor families, had been destroyed by fire. Their little household possessions had been consumed by the flames. Without any ostentation or delay, some forty apartments were furnished elsewhere by him to whom this book is dedicated, to serve as homes for the unfortunate victims of the fire.
>
> "In commemoration thereof, as a slight tribute of his lasting appreciation of the extensive good accomplished and of his deep admiration for the generous and human spirit that prompted the act, the author respectfully dedicates this book to William Randolph Hearst."

A New Oppenheim Novel

NOWADAYS, when we catch the name Oppenheim on the cover of a book, we have to ask, "Which Oppenheim? Is it Phillips or James?" For our own James Oppenheim with his "Dr. Rast" and his "Wild Oats" has now two keen-edged novels to his credit, and must be reckoned with.

But this time it is E. Phillips Oppenheim of two and twenty novels that has handed out to us his seasonable story.

Mr. E. Phillips Oppenheim is a natural story-teller; and he dramatizes such a scene as a theatre or a restaurant crowd with a light quick touch, which, while superficial and sketchy, still gives you the fleeting feeling of having brushed against the throng and caught its odors and laughters.

Mr. Oppenheim has dextrous touch for complications; and in "The Lost Ambassador" ties and unites a double-twisted knot of mystery in the selling of two battleships by a Brazilian emissary. The interest is intensified by this governmental entanglement, as well as by a teasing romance between a Brazilian lady and a young Englishman.

Altogether, it's a Phillips Oppenheim story, which is like saying of frogs that they are warty, or of crows that they are black.

A Social Adventure

"Young Wallingford," by George Randolph Chester, has become a name for a type of the pleasant but perfidious bandit of business. Mr. Chester, creator of "Bobby Burnit" (the rich youth who had to be converted to the gospel of real work), is also the creator of Wallingford, whose one exertion is to "work" other people. Reading Wallingford's conquests of the gullible may warn the confiding to beware of the sharper whom we have always with us. A new series of the Wallingford stories are now running in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

"The Corsican"; Napoleon's Autobiography

AN autobiography of Napoleon, a new light upon that complex personality, that superman—the thought gives a stir of excitement! But a testament in cipher has not been discovered in a crypt in Paris or in a crevice in St. Helena. "The Corsican," an extraordinary biography, is Bonaparte's own record, concerning military campaigns, public affairs and domestic life—an autobiography patiently compiled and translated by the Napoleonic student and specialist, Mr. R. M. Johnston, from letters, speeches and notes of the Emperor himself.

The whole volume (save a few bracketed passages) is from the Emperor's own lip or pen. Transpositions, data and fact, are made in order to give coherence and sequence. The compiler tells us not to look for an arrangement of historical documents, but for the underlying psychological current dominating a strange and stern career.

The book is deeply interesting as the inner expression of this Lucifer-spirit, so proud, so cold, and yet at times so magnetically appealing.

A curious passage is the exiled Emperor's observation upon Waterloo and its meaning.

"I frightened them pretty well with my invasion of England, didn't I? In four days I could have reached London. I would not have entered as a conqueror but as a liberator. I would have acted the part of William III. again, but with greater generosity. From there I would have operated from south to north, under monarchial forms. The obstacles before which I failed did not proceed from men but from the elements; in the south it was the sea destroyed me; and in the north it was the fire of Moscow and the ice of Winter. So there it is, water, air, fire, all nature and nothing but nature; these were the opponents of a universal regeneration commanded by Nature herself! The problems of Nature are insoluble!"

Down Home With Jennie Allen

JENNIE ALLEN, as fine a specimen of a kindly, human benevolent New England character as ever broke into print, will appeal to her large circle of admirers through her latest chronicle of adventures and housewife experience. Jennie will be found now largely in Chictooset, Me., though she does manage to spend part of the time in Providence, where "Ed and me" are at last in "our own home." There is much that is sunny and sweet in the life of Jennie Allen, and there is much that is good and cheering in the philosophy that she distributes so freely in her good natured, garrulous way. New Englanders of the old sort will live over again their youth in the prattle of Jennie Allen, and every reader with a sympathetic feeling for eccentric character will be enlivened and delighted by her observations.

Jonas Hawley

THE expediency of stirring up the emotions of the Civil War is questionable. Mr. Pennell says in his apologetic preface to his novel, "Jonas Hawley," that the history of the greatest civil war is incomplete without the novelist's delineation of the social conditions, political animosities, etc., but it would seem a little to early, even fifty years after, to stir up smoldering embers with the antagonisms of "black abolitionists" and "copperheads." Happily this story is not strictly sectional. The scene is laid in Ohio and deals exclusively with factional feeling in the North, the everlasting strife between the Union League and the Knights of the Golden Circle. The sympathies of the author are strictly and unreservedly with the North, and his plea is that of a Northerner, a Union man and an abolitionist. In fact, his sympathies are so strong that much space is given over to political argument, and this injures the story as a story. Moreover the author is not an experienced novelist—that is plain—and that also tells against him. But it may be conceded that the book is reasonably full of incident, is stirring in spots, and is undoubtedly a good photograph of conditions in Ohio during the Civil War when Vallandigham came into prominence and partly into power. The story ends satisfactorily so far as its various romances are concerned, and there is at least one prominent conversion to the Union cause.

R. F.

"Jonas Hawley," by W. W. Pennell. C. M. Clark Publishing Company.

he Heritage of the Desert

A MORE or less exciting contribution to the literature of the Southwest is Zane Grey's "Heritage of the Desert," a story dealing with ranch life and the perils of ranchmen. Incident to the progress of the story are the adventures of a horse that compares favorably with Winthrop's celebrated steed in "John Brent," and a dog worthy of friendship with Bob, the Son of Battle. The story treats of the romance of a young Easterner who goes to the land of the Mormons for his health, is befriended by a worthy Mormon whose vast estate is in the vicinity of the Grand Canyon, and who loves and eventually wins a young girl, half Indian, half Spanish. It is a pretty romance and its culmination comes only after the young man has proved himself a hero and worthy lover, and after various exciting duels in which the desperate villains are finally exterminated. The story has much of the atmosphere of the great country wherein the scenes are located, is filled with admirable descriptions of the magnificent canyon and its superb surroundings, and is as fresh and unconventional in its manner of telling as the reader would exact. It is a good story of its type and is of a type that never seems to tire.

Book Notes

HOW TO MAKE VILLAGE LIFE MORE PLEASANT.

"NEIGHBORHOOD Entertainments," by Rene B. Stern, is the latest book of "The Young Farmer's Practical Library," edited by Ernest Ingersoll. Like its companion volumes, it is designed for those who have not easy access to city or library, and it aims to brighten and beautify the social life of the rural community.

"The Farmers' Rest Room, the Traveling Library, Arbor Day, Clubs and Celebrations—these are among the many interesting things discussed.

A FORGOTTEN MYSTIC.

"WISE-KNUT" is a reprint of Bjornstjerne Bjornson's forty-year-old story of a strange character of Norway, who had the power of "seeing things."

"Wise-Knut" was a peasant afflicted with the "falling sickness," but at times possessed of (or possessed by) a gift of healing and seership. Like William Blake, he was in constant communication with unseen beings whose voices directed him. Strange powers that we call mesmeric and clairvoyant were his; the wonder of his cures and prophecies filled the countryside. One can imagine William James's warm interest in the psychology of this strange being and his extra-mortal powers.

COL. ROOSEVELT IN CARTOON.

MR. ALBERT SHAW, of The Review of Reviews, has taken upon himself the interesting task of collecting "A Cartoon History of Roosevelt's Career." Over 600 cartoons are woven into a narrative of Colonel Roosevelt's dynamic progress from 1884 to 1911. Mr. Shaw's preface, a little disquisition upon the cartoon in general, is a valuable addition to this smiling volume.
